STIRRING ADDRESS BY COLONEL MOULSON

Decoration Day Well Observed by Knights of Pythias Thursday—Impressive Service Held.

The annual decoration of the graves of departed brethren by the Knights of Pythians took place Thursday afternoon. The parade was an imposing one. The Pythians turned out in force, and the marching was excellent, the uniform companies showing up especially well. The parade was in command of Col. Alfred Dodge, of the 1st Regiment, Maritime Provinces, and he was accompanied by Col. F. A. Godsoe, Col. James Moulson and Lieut. Col. LeB. Wilson. Following them came the Artillery Band, then the subordinate lodges, commanded as follows:—New Brunswick, No. 1, R. H. Irwin, Chancellor Commander; Union No. 2, E. Milton Smith; St. John, No. 30, Oscar Price; Uniform Rank Companies; Victoria, No. 1, Lieut. Harrison Kinnear; Cygnet, No. 5, Capt. R. T. Patchell.

The parade left Castle Hall, Germain street, at 2 o'clock, the route of march being Germain, Queen and Charlotte streets to the Queen's Rink, where two barouches loaded with flowers were taken in line at the head of the parade. Resuming, the march was by Charlotte, Union and out Waterloo. The first stop was made at the Church of England cemetery, where a short service was held, also in the Methodist cemetery opposite, and the graves of comrades were decorated.

The march to Fernhill was then resumed, and the usual services held there, Rev. Ralph J. Houghton, chaplain of the Massachusetts Brigade, reading scripture and leading in prayer.

Col. James Moulson then delivered the annual address as follows:

"This is Pythian memorial day. It brings sadness to many because they think more than usual of the old friends who are gone. It brings to mind the many strong links of friendship that have been broken. The loved ones who are missed so much are thought of today more than at any other time. Although the observance of the day is of a solemn character, the fact that it keeps green the memory of those we loved makes the day one that is looked forward to with interest by many.

"As we assembled here from time to time, we noticed many who joined with us year after year, but we missed others. Some who are here today will be absent a year hence. They will have crossed the stream to the great unknown. All are travelling toward the end of this life's short journey of sunshine and sorrow, but our object is not to make you sad; rather would we have you rejoice that by and by there will be a grand re-union. Friends will meet again, former friendships be renewed, not for a day but for eternity. The present may seem dark but you know the sun shines behind the darkest clouds.

"Brother Knights, you came here today to discharge a duty of love required of you as Pythians. You have only placed beautiful flowers on the graves of your departed brothers, a very simple act, and yet it appeals to the highest, the best in human nature. It touches a tender cord in the hearts of all, and strengthens the bonds by which you are united It is the aim of Pythians to bind men together in the bonds of fraternal love. This can be accomplished only by the practice of its principles—friendship, charity and Benevolence. In proportion as you practice these, so do you help to accomplish the object sought.

"Enrolling as a member only, accomplishes nothing. It but adds to the labor of the active, the willing workers. To be true Pythians you must be ready to do your share in exemplifying the teachings of the order. Your aim should be to lead others to a higher, a better life. You should fill the hours with kind words, the days with generous deeds, sow seeds of kindness all along the wayside, and thus brighten the path of those to whom life seems a never ending night. In doing this there comes a reward unknown to those who are so wrapped up in self that they heed not the cries of distress, the needs of the sick or the comforting of the sorrowing.

"Brilliant uniforms may please the eye, but alone they fail to give permanency to an order. Great numerical strength is a strength and power for good only as the numbers perform the duties required of them. To make the order all it should be there must be individual, and united effort to do noble deeds. There must be in your demeanor towards one another an evidence of friendship, of brotherly love, not only in the castle hall, but as you mingle with each other in the daily walks of life. There must be evident a desire to bring each other up to a higher, a better life.

"Your friendship, your love for one another should be like that of Damon and Pythias. If this spirit is within you, make it manifest, listen again and again to the beautiful story of the friendship of Damon and Pythias. Listen until your heart pulsates with a desire to be as true as they. Remember that as you illustrate in your own person the friendship, the charity, the benevolence that we teach, you will bring honor to the order, at all times, be actuated by the principles we teach, and it will make the world better and brighter.

"Work while it is day. The night cometh when no man worketh. It will come to many of your brothers. It will come to you. I need not remind you of the uncertainty of human life. You have seen the strong and independent of one day. The weak and dependent of the next. You have known of many unexpected deaths. Have these and other warnings led you to prepare for the summons that will call you hence? Can you

'Read your title clear
To mansions in the skies,
And bid farewell to every fear,
And wipe your weeping eyes'?

If not, may the ceremonies of the day create thoughts that may lead you to so live that, when the western hills obscure life's sun, you may rest secure in the promises of the dawn of a never ending day.

"On behalf of the Knights of Pythias, I thank all who have donated flowers, and assisted in preparing for the observance of the day. I also thank the superintendent of Fernhill, and others, for special favors and assistance."

There were three deaths in the ranks during the past year. E. W. Allingham, Geo. E. Price and S. H. Riley. About sixty graves were decorated.
