

The Tangle of Fate

CHAPTER XXI.

Bonnie gained her own room without meeting any one, and threw herself upon a lounge at the open window to dream over with painful bliss those sweet moments with her lost lover. "He loves me—loves me still, my darling," she murmured, gladly, for despite everything she loved him madly still, and would love him to the last hour of her life. Meanwhile Lin La Valliere dreamed, too, of her looks and smiles, and longed to have her for his treasure.

the devil in, repented of his sins and got afraid to meet his angry God. He thought if he would confess some of his wickedness it might help his cause, so he sent for me, and told me—"Told you," murmured the heiress eagerly, unconscious that she spoke. The old man looked at her fondly, and proceeded: "It was all a plot of that devil there to get my girl. She would not even listen to his love-making, but he determined to have her anyhow, and he laid his plans to catch her that night when the poor innocent child went to look in the pool on Halloween. He threatened to murder her if she did not marry him, and with a pistol at her head she became his bride, while she hated and feared him worse than all the devils in Hades."

"Oh, papa, dear, that was just the way of it, just the way?" cried the heiress, very unexpectedly to all, and she flung herself tempestuously in her father's arms. (To be Continued.)

FROZEN TO DEATH. Fate of Two Unprepared Prospectors in the North.

Toronto, Feb. 17.—A pathetic story of the Gowganda silver fields was told yesterday in a local railway office by a man but lately returned from the district. It goes to show the dangers confronting those who in the mad rush for riches go unprepared into the cold north land. During last week a prospector going through the district between Burwash Lake and Newell came upon the dead body of a man in a little hut. All the circumstances pointed to death by freezing. Owing to the depth of the snow and the hardness of the ground it was impossible to bury the man where he was found, so the corpse was laid upon the toboggan, the little tent and the supplies belonging to the unfortunate man were piled up with him and the whole tightly wrapped in, completely obscuring the grim contents beneath. Down at Sellwood Junction, the terminus of the C. N. O. Railway line, the whole was shipped on the train with the live prospector's effects. On arriving at Sudbury the police were notified and the body later claimed. The prospector was unknown, and has not since been seen. This was the second parcel of a like nature shipped down with other effects, and the railroad conducted an inquiry with the result that the above circumstances came to light. The second body was also claimed. Previous to this two men had been reported missing, and this probably clears up the mystery.
