SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

DON'T BLAME THE CHILDREN.

She has, besides a baby and a little boy four, two girls, one 11 and 13; and one would naturally expect that they would be a good deal of help to her, especially during their summer vacation.

Someone to whom she was talking about her new way of living said as much, and she sighed.

"They ought to be," she said, "but they aren't. It's just like pulling teeth to get any steady work out of them. Really I don't see how they can be so heartless when they know how hard it is for me. I have to keep right at them to have them do their beds and the dishes. I can't understand it. You'd think they'd want to help me. They were lovely at first, too, but it didn't take long for it to wear off."

Blame Their Training.

She seemed so grieved and surprised that her children should not show more character and stamina about doing routine work that bored them.

Wouldn't it be more surprising if they had? What have they had to develop character? From babyhood those children have had everything done for them. They have never had the simplest task to do daily. Food appeared on the table and dishes disappeared as if by magic. And every wish has been gratified as far as possible.

Nothing for Character to Bite On.
Suppose one never ate anything but liquid and predigested food. Would one be apt to have the best of teeth and digestion?

Why then should one expect children to develop character if they are not given anything for their character to bite on?

I have faith to believe that if their mother does not give in to them too easily those children will develop helpfulness and responsibility, for they have good stuff in them. If she holds them to their tasks and tries to make them realize that it is only right and fair they should do their share, they will probably develop the capacity for doing something they don't want to do.

And that will be more valuable to them in after life than all the luxuries she used to give them.

But What Is An Advantage?
Is it fair to blame a child for not developing character and a sense of responsibility, and a capacity for facing the disagreeable things of life courageously and competently, when you have done everything to shelter him from responsibility, and from the things that are disagreeable?

Of course the reason parents make this mistake is that they want so passionately to give their children every happiness and every advantage. But too often parents try to do this without getting it clear in their own minds what contributes to lasting happiness and what is an advantage.

Mr. Lloyd George

AND BRITAIN'S GREATEST ASSET.

Mr. Lloyd George recently said: "The business of statesmanship was to see that everything in the way of our making the best of the country was swept on one side so that the people should have full advantage of all the resources Providence had intended for their joy."

"Britain had great natural advantages, greater than any of her competitors in Europe. Britain had the best coal supply, the most fertile land, and on the whole a temperate climate. The climate was a little fickle, perhaps, but when it rained it dropped fatness. Yet we were buying three hundred and fifty millions' worth of food. He did not suggest that we could produce all of it, but we could produce scores of millions' worth if the best use were made of the land. In the days of our rural prosperity when the Chancellor of the Exchequer was abused for a starchy supertax, we took no account of the fact that these hundreds of millions' worth were purchased abroad. We also lost sight of the fact that our rural population was moving into the industrial area. A country could not prosper without a great rural population. "A strong, virile nation was one that made the best of its land. We were doing it! The nation should look into the question earnestly and fearlessly as a great business nation always looked into any concern which was vital to its life and prosperity. The land was the one great industry in this country that was not so organized as far as the system of ownership was concerned as to produce the best out of the asset. The capital in the land, in the freedom of this country, would be a thousand millions. This was probably a fair time, what we had got in the mines, probably six or seven times what we had got in shipping, infinitely more than we had got in our cotton or woollen industries. No one could name an industry with the possible exception of the railways that had got such a good investment into it, and yet there was no capital which was handled in a more unbusinesslike way."

"He was not talking of the farmers' part, but of the ownership of the freeholds. How many of the owners of capital in land at the present moment were devoting the same thought as was being devoted to their own industries to the working out of their own industry, to developing it, to making plans and schemes for increasing its productivity? The trouble with the land was that it was the only industry where we had a divorce between capital and management and direction. Until we had a reconsideration of the whole system of land tenure in this country, until we put it on a more businesslike footing, this country would be wasting the most valuable asset which Providence had placed at the disposal of the nation."

WORK AND PLAY.

It is well to do some playing when the day of toil is done; when we're spent twelve hours at a plow or scuder we have trusted, the weary day, it is fitting, gentle reader, to indulge in harmless play. When we've earned the precious dollars that will pay the monthly bills, let us do our stand-up collars and enjoy the pace that kills. But we cannot dance a mambo or slide down the cellar doors with a fair degree of pleasure, if we haven't done our chores. We feel guilty and dejected as we trot out there, if the tasks have been neglected that demand our skill and care. Some there are forever playing, with no duties on their mind, down the path of pleasure straying, far before and far behind. But they're bored and weary critics who in sloth forever bask, and each passing hour embitters men who have no honest task. There is always most enjoyment for the man who spends his day in some earnest, sane employment, drawing down a well-earned pay. Oh, the playtime has its splendors, for the man of nerve and brawn who has torn his pink suspenders moving whiskers off the lawn. Knowing that he's stocked the larder, filled the tank with gasoline, we admire his pep and ardor as he gambols on the green.

SWALLOWS.

Beneath the cliff where stands our shack.

The summer swallows dwell; And every coat on every back.

Pits its possessor well; Day in and out on wire or tree.

When they have come to rest, Those feathered gentlemen I see In evening raiment dressed.

No foolish rule need they obey Which governs time or place; They wear their dress clothes night and day.

And with consummate grace: The broadcloth of their garb, I note, Is something ultra fine.

And not a wrinkle mars the coat, As is the case with mine.

I sit and watch them proudly strut Like stylish wedding guests.

And vow no common tailor cut Those perfect coats and vests; With grace and style in every line.

And ease past words to tell, I wish that swallow-tail of mine Would fit me half so well.

These feathered gentlemen show me How dress clothes should be worn, From all self-consciousness they're free.

They're to the manner born: In such a garb I feel absurd, A much-embarrassed male, I think it really takes a bird To wear a swallow-tail.

Fuel Economy in the Body

HOW SUGAR ELIMINATES FAULTY COMBUSTION IN HUMAN ENGINE.

Toronto, Ont., Aug. 11.—When a patient with Diabetes goes into the condition of unconsciousness known as coma, it is because the body does not use its sugar supply properly, and because of the formation of substances called ketones. That we can imitate in the test tube just what happens when sugar is or is not burned in the body was demonstrated by Prof. P. A. Shaffer of Washington University, St. Louis, in a paper before the Physiology section of the British Association.

When the lamp of life is not burning properly, as for example in a disease like diabetes, the smoke or the compounds formed by the imperfect combustion are known as ketones. If the diabetic can burn sugar as he can if he is treated with insulin, then the ketones are not formed. In certain combustions carried out in the test tube, sugar acts in a similar way, causing the disappearance of these ketones.

On the theory that this action of sugar outside the body might be the same as its action inside the body, Dr. Shaffer has been studying the former process. He finds that the first combustion products of the sugar are substances called osones, and if this be the case in the body then the sugar does not, as has been supposed, form lactic acid when it is burned. The biochemists were greatly interested in this suggestion of Dr. Shaffer.

"A Royal Divorce"

Magnificent Production
OPENS TO BIG BUSINESS AT THE NICKEL THEATRE.

The great English film production of the wonderful story of the life of Napoleon, entitled "A Royal Divorce" opened to big business at the Nickel Theatre last night.

The story of "A Royal Divorce" is well known to old and young alike, and we are quite confident that, in spite of the manifold historical inaccuracies in this production, the public will fall over themselves to see it, and in the main will be more than satisfied with what they see.

Humour plays a very great part in the historical side of this production, for we learn for the first time that the battle of Waterloo was fought only by English and French soldiers, but, of course, that does not really matter. The picture is a thing, and as a picture we have no hesitation in saying that it really is a most interesting photo-drama, beautifully staged and wonderfully well acted.

The Napoleon of Gwyn Evans is a fine piece of work, as is also the Talleyrand of J. J. C. Robertshaw, which is only excelled by the characters of Josephine and Marie Louise, played respectively by Gertrude McCoy and Mary Dibley, who almost make their parts speak through the screen.

The film opens with the cadet days of the "Little Corporal" and ends with the defeated Napoleon on the lonely island of St. Helena, and as we are carried through the passage of life of the greatest military genius Europe has ever seen or read of, we could not help feeling impressed with the stages of this great man's life, and although the paramount feature of the film is the divorce between Napoleon and Josephine, it was the causes for this extraordinary act which gripped our attention most.

The spectacular side of this production has been well attended to. Especially would we mention the magnificent scenes of the conquest of and the retreat from Moscow, which was vividly brought home by a splendid rendering of Tchaikovsky's wonderful overture, "1812." Another impressive scene was that of Napoleon's abdication and leaving-taking at the Palace of Fontainebleau, which was one of those scenes which cannot fail to stir up human emotions.

New Material

LESSONS BUILDING COST IN RUSSIA.

MOSCOW, July 15 (A.P.)—Russia's scarcity of living accommodations and the high cost of building material have forced the Soviet authorities to experiment in the construction of what are termed "themolite" houses, the invention of a Russian engineer named Peter Galakhoff. A themolite house has the conventional framework of wood, but a liquid material of heavy consistency (themolite), composed of sawdust, straw and common tree latex, mixed with lime, plaster and antiseptic solution, is interposed between the outer and inner boards.

When this mixture becomes hard, the house is rendered moisture-proof, resists decay, and is impervious to certain insects. With a coating of special paint containing the same ingredients as "themolite," the house is also rendered fireproof. Houses of this type, according to the inventor, can be erected for 25 per cent. less than the ordinary house and can be completed within less than six weeks.

A Banner Show

AT THE STAR MOVIE LAST EVENING.

A performance that could not fail to please the most ardent movie critic was that which was presented to the patrons of the popular Star last evening. The feature picture, "Racing Hearts" with Agnes Ayres and Jack Holt, was followed with the keenest of interest from beginning to end. In this we see a money mad speed fiapper—daring, swift, vivacious and saucy, and running throughout is a pretty love story which gives those two stars ample scope to bring to the screen the ability they possess.

Larry Semon in the "Horsehoe" was a riot, the audience being in roars right through. With Larry you must laugh, and if you doubt it, see "Horsehoe."

Caruso, who is this week making his first appearance, was probably never heard to better advantage, and now that it is his closing week, we unhesitatingly say Mr. Caruso is making a special effort singing each night two different numbers, whilst for his final on Friday he will in the language of the street "go over the top."
