Then at the hall there was a rather solemn luncheon, with Mr. and Mrs. Bamber as the only guests. Geraldine was very silent, and seemed to be only just awakening to a sense of the seriousness of the step she had taken; but she was too overwrought to cry. But she recovered sufficiently to throw a pound or so of rice, in a weak and wavering way, in at the window of the carriage as it started on its way to Goldborough station. And she considered it a lucky omen that some of it went into the bridegroom's eyes; but he did not see it in the same light, and gave way under his breath to a bad millitary habit, as he looked sharply out of the window and met her inane gamle of satisfaction; and this omen was not so good.

Geraldine was not superstitious; moreover, she was glad to leave the gloomy old house which had been her home for the past four months; but when her husband suddenly started up in the carriage, declaring that he had lost a looket which was more precious to him than life, and eager to turn back to hunt for it, and when she picked up from the floor of the carrirage a little shield-shaped medallion, which had opened in the fall, showing the portrait of a young and beautiful woman, Regiment of a young and beautiful woman, Regiment and sunderly sunders and sunderly started up in the carriage, declaring that he had lost a looket which was more precious to him than life, and eager to turn back to hunt for it, and when she picked up from the floor of the carrirage a little shield-shaped medallion, which had opened a conson for the common station of a young and beautiful woman, Regiment of a young and beautiful woman, Regiment of a young and beautiful woman, Regiment of the past for the metal and the promises and the work of the past for the many longer—she crossed the carriage. THRILLING ENCOUNTER.

With Rolling Pin and Butcher Knife a Woman Laid Out a Bear.

Fort Pierce, Fla., May 12 .- Miss Marie Robinson, who lives two miles from here on Cedar Hammock, was in the kitchen rolling out bread Saturday, when she was startled by the appearance of a young black bear close be-side her, standing on its hind feet. Raising a big hardwood rolling pin, she brought it down with a tremendous whack on the bear's snout. Bruin did not like this treatment, and he adanced toward the girl, fencing with his forepaws.

Again Miss Robinson delivered a blow at her advancing foe, but the bear had earned wisdom, and he deftly parried with his right paw. He then caught Miss Robinson's dress with his other paw, tearing it from her shoulder. In return, she gave hom a straight righthander with the roller, which caught him under the ear and sent him down Bruin scrambled up from the second round, and he was pretty mad. He shuffled up to the girl, warily keeping both forepaws extended and growling angrily. Miss Robinson again landed a right roller, hitting him squarely between the eyes. As soon as he recovered from the stunning effects of the blow he endeavored to grasp the girl his paws.

Seizing a big butcher knife that lay on the table, Miss Robinson lunged forward with it, its blade penetrating the bear's neck. A bright stream fol-lowed its withdrawal, and bruin was becoming groggy. Blow after blow with the rolling pin fell upon his head, and after a few minutes the brave girl had the satisfaction of seeing the anima roll over on his side and expire.
