These were five in number, from John Golding, Bryanston, Charles Stevens, Adelaide street north; John Smart, Odell's; Robert Riddell London View, and Robert Paisley, Ilrenewed, the proprietor having met with the demands of the commissioners, but the others were only extended for three months.

WRITTEN BY A LONDONER. The Globe of Saturday says: "A well-written story by a Canadian author is something to be grateful for, and this exactly describes Captain J. W. Fuller's 'Izolda: A Magyar Romance' (New York, The Abbey Press). The author, who is a resident of London. Ont. has evidently made a careful historical study of the state of Hungary at the beginning of the six teenth century, and he has written against this fine background a story of love and adventure which rises to the dignity of a tragedy. He has adopted with good effect the artistic structural device of a prologue and an epilogue, these being put into the mouths of members of the great and nteresting gypsy race." [Capt. J. W. Fuller 927 Lorne avenue, is well known in the east end. He came to London from Brantford, when the G. T. R. car works were re-established here and is chief clerk in the shops.]
