not be included in the fielding averages. Kling's correct average, according to Pulliam's own figures, is .974, which agrees with the averages published by the Tribune the day after the season closed.

The team fielding averages are all incorrect owing to the same mistake of figuring the passed balls as fielding errors. The Colts are tied for third place with Cincinnati, the leading team being New York and the second team Pittsburg. The correct figures make no change in the relative standing of the teams in fielding, except that Brooklyn and Boston are tied for the sixth place. The correct team fielding averages are: New York 955, Pittsburg .954, Chicago and Cincinnati .953, St. Louis .952, Boston and Brooklyn .945, Philadelphia .936.
