Irish aris were contributed by six young lady planists, and His Lordship roso and addressed the children. He hand their more substantial gift, which he assured them he would present to the Holy Father with pleasure, and at the same time he would tell him of his treasured children—the beautiful angelie souls who were the delight of the Church and of their parents. He fully appreciated the beautiful sontiments conveyed by songs, dialogue and address. They gave him an anticipation of the joys which he would experience in his visit to Ireland and to Rome. He oxpected to have greetings from many pleasant faces during his absence and to visit many beautiful spots; but, no more joyful sight, he felt sure, could be witnessed than the avect faces which at prosent were suffling upon him. Though far away from home, with the ocean dividing him from his beloved parishiloners, yet forever with him would be the expectancy of the warm wolcome which was awaiting him when he turned his footsteps homeward. The beautiful sentiments, expressed in such pootic sentences, replete with oloquent persuasiveness, argued, he thought, that the children in his dioceon had no need to contrain the sentences which that operation was supposed to lend to the tongue. He thought be should got a chip of this "Blarney stone" for himself, as at the children in his dioceon had no need to contrain the work of the wore

Neopawa, Man., Oct. 21.—The 'arting reappearance on the streets here of a woman who for many months had been reported a hopeless in ralid and alowly dying, and by many believed to be already dead, has created the greatest continent and subject of talk that has ever before stirred the nerves of this quiet village.

To see a women walking the street in seeming perfect health who had been believed dead or dying was a sonsation for persons not given to superstition. The subject of all this wonder—Mrs. T. H. McKee, formally of Listowel, but residing here for the last four years—in a retament of her case said: "Residing for many years at Listowel, Ont., after suffering six years I was given up by the decions, and at these has a face record to try the offect and the last as a face record to try the offect and the last and record to try the offect and the last properties of the continuous control of the c

What good it does us to admire! Admiration is the breath of the soul—I had almost said lies greatness. A narrow mind will not admire, neither will a quaested one. In order thoroughly to admire, one must needs get out of self. Admiration, the supreme independence, is a conjueror as well as a revealor. To admire is to possess.
