WINNIPEG STRIKE FINALLY SETTLED

Agreement Has Been Drawn Up Between Council and Strikers. MAKE CONCESSIONS. Senator Robertson, Acting as Mediator, Aids in Settlement.

Winnipeg, May 26.—Winnipeg's civic strike is over. For the first time in three and a half days a street car appeared on Main street Saturday morning. The telephone operators and the various industrial workers who had been on strike since the strike was called off by the city council, are now back to work.

When Senator G. D. Robertson, acting with David Campbell as mediator on behalf of the federal government, announced Friday night that he had persuaded the strikers and city council each to make concessions which make a settlement of the dispute possible, the most serious strike in Winnipeg's history was settled. The formalities necessary to the conclusion of the agreement, which has been drawn up between council and workers still have to be carried out, but the strikers are going back to work. Employers involved in the strike were all waited upon yesterday and asked to sign an agreement that these demands have been met, while the men have been informed that workers taken on, especially in public utilities, will be retained as permanent help where the heads of departments decide that this is advisable.
