Baptist Women's Mission.

The union meeting of the Baptist Women's Mission Circles will be held in the Sunday school hall of the Jarvis-street Baptist Church this afternoon at 3 o'clock.

Dr. Gordon of Montreal will speak on the work in Grande Ligne. Miss Jones, lately appointed missionary to India, will also address the meeting. A social half hour will be spent at the close of the service.

Women's Art Association Meets

An interesting event of yesterday afternoon was the annual meeting of the Women's Art Association, held at their permanent gallery in the "La Plaza" Apartments on Jarvis-street. Mrs. Dignam was in the chair, and the proceedings of the day consisted in the election of officers for the coming year, followed by a pleasant hour of tea and conversation downstairs.

The order of business was as follows:
The president delivered an address reviewing the growth and progress of the society during the last twenty-one years, and the late incorporation of the club into a national body by special act of parliament during the last session. Among the many activities of the society are art exhibitions, courses of lectures. sculpture, bookbinding of lectures, sculpture, bookbinding basket work and the various domestic arts. Mrs. J. A. Paterson read reports from the various branches of the society, which are all prospering, including the wood-carving and reading clubs and others. The treasurer's report followed, showing a balance of cash. It

The officers chosen for the coming year are as follows: President, Mrs. J. A. Dignam; vice-presidents, Mrs. J. A. Paterson, Lady Pellatt, Lady Tilley of New Brunswick, Mrs. George Parkin of Goring-on-Thames, London; recording secretary, Mrs. Robert Inglis; corresponding secretary, Mrs. C. D. Scott; treasurer, Miss Fanny Lindsay.

waste, and too much fat is extravagance.

A good manager does not "rest on her oars" after she has marketed well.
She knows the value of odds and ends so thoroly that nothing is thrown away. so thoroly that nothing is thrown away. She sees great possibilities in a few cold potatoes or other vegetables. Left-over halibut or other fish suggests a palatable dish of kedgeree. Left-overs beef and bacon go to make a jar of petted beef and ham. Even the inevitable crusts appear as browned crumbs" for sprinkling over are the results, especially to the social ham, bacon and made dishes, while larger bits of bread serve as "croutons." Or they enter into a pudding, which is served with a delicious sauce. Yet, the keynote in her "engineering" is to avoid a dozen gaudy things if we have been said to avoid a dozen gaudy things if we have been said to avoid a dozen gaudy things if we have ther use in macaroni au gratin.

And so the story goes continued to the "they lived happy ever after" conclusion, but it is an impossible story shade of social difference to each perto those who live in flats. They must follow the French method of buying finitely and immediately offending.

Just enough for the day, yet the same Perhaps it is as well for the doctrine noted the world over for their frugality Many and ludicrous are the mis-and their ability to make both ends takes made by the prescribers of man-

Co-operation of the simplest kind may be of advantage in economical marketing. Canned goods, for example, may be bought in case lots at a considerable saving over buying by the single canto say nothing of the advantage of having something in the house to fall back upon in case of emergency. By getting your neighbor to order with you, the come again. In it are several cans of upon in case of emergency. By getting your neighbor to order with you, the cost is divided and everybody satisfied appecially as assorted cases may be bought.

Canned goods will not, flowever, keep indefinitely, and a fresh-looking label is no absolute sign of freshness. In selecting them, do not accept any with two soldered holes in the cap—they have been reheated. Do not take rusty cans, and be suspicious of "Enged" or "swelled" heads. Canned articles that can be washed, like beans, peas and the like should be rinsed off before using. You must also keep canned goods in a moderately cool place. Do not leave them exposed to the sun or in a warm place, and, on the other hand, do not allow them to freeze.

Cereals absorb molsture and odors, and grow musty if kept in any large supply. Flour, for example, will heat and be spoiled, and in cold weather is affected by freezing. Under all conditions, cereals should be kept in a warm, dry place, and well covered. Prepared cereals may be bought in quantities, but these, as well as unprepared articles, are subject to weevils.

Meat, it goes without saying, should be fresh, and bear in mind that, as a rule, the less expensive cuts contain more nourishment and go farther than the more expensive ones. Bone in meat soup or stock, Gristle, however, is sheer waste, and too much fat is extravagance.

A good manager does not "rest on her cover" of the surface with methat to a good manager wand to make a surface.

A good manager does not "rest on her cover" of the promoter of the corned and serve plping hot.

I hope that you will agree with me that they are fine. So is gallimaufry, produced and serve plping hot.

Manners and Mannerizing.

That there is a difference between the two is indubitable, but unfortunately "doctors differ" as to where the line should be drawn, and dire indeed wards on the third Wednesdays of each month.

You know, wher we are poor and keynote in her "engineering" is to avoid repetition and consequent sameness and satiety.

She has a keen eye upon the condition of the vegetables in stock. She picks them over occasionally to see that no decayed ones remain among them to infect the others. Cheese which has become dry is grated and bottled for further use in macaroni au gratin.

And so the story goes continued to one good suft of apparel rather than a dozen gaudy things—if we have good taste. Hence if our early education did not include three nurses who all spoke different languages and a butler and footman, why we just restrict our manner to the safe basis of "same for all," a form of restraint and courtesy as proper in a street car as a ball room. Very few people can differentiate their manner suc-

my in left-overs is to be adopted of Christian brotherhood that this is is among the French, who are neet.
In one corner of my pantry is an feminine gender—the kind that all men read with a sneaking smile. For instance, in one of them the editorial actually speaks of how one woman fostered the growth of chivairy in man by always saying to an individual man who took off his hat when in the elevator with women, "Thank you, sir!!! We hope sincerely for the sake of that woman's self-respect that she was old and uugly, and so her intention escaped being mistaken for the common and vulgar one of striking up acquaintanceship.

And the editor of that enlightened paper recommends other women to go and do likewise: The courtesy shown by a man in such a case should never be so misunderstood. He simply asserts his breding, his class and his self-repect when he pays a courtesy like that to a woman. It is to her sex not to the individual that the politeness is rendered, and she would blunder all thru life if she mistook such for a personal attention or foolishly took any notice of it, except to show herself courteous in turn to others, in the due legree of her age and sex.

It is really remarkable and deplorable to see the initiative which women permit themselves to take in And the editor of that enlightened men permit themselves to take in their most everyday relations with men. Verily the day is not far off when they will propose to the timid shrinking creature which the man will have become, and he will return the compliment by offering in abject terror to be a brother to them.

arts. Mrs. J. A. Paterson read reports from the various branches of the society, which are all prospering, including the wood-carving and reading clubs and others. The treasurer's report followed, showing a balance of cash. It was moved, seconded and passed that an appointment should be made of a lady to visit and report on the domestic industries among the Doukhobors, with the hope of encouraging these and adding to the collection of the club. One hundred dollars was voted to be raised for this purpose, and one lady, whose name we were unable to get, contributed $15 immediately.

The ladies then adjourned for tea in their artistically decorated tearoom below, with its dainty white tables and homespun hangings.
