Shea in The Middleman, To Carefully staged and capably acted, that time-smellowed classic, so long identified with E. S. Willard, "The Middleman." was presented at the rand yesterday and promises to be one of the most attractive plays that. Thomas E. Shea and his excellent company have offered Toronto theatregoers during the spring engagement, Mr. Shea's interpretation of the character of Cyrus Blenkarn was one of the cleverest and most interesting pleces of stage work seen in many a day. It was a splendidly enacted role and was apparently appreciated by two enthusiastic audiences, for the popular actor was compelled to step out of the character and express his thanks to the audience. The dominant character in the play is Cyrus Blenkarn, the aged inventor, who in poverty is endeavoring to discover the secret of the famous Tatlow ware, and eventually finds it. His former employer is also anxious to obtain the secret, and is employing his manager to gain from the old man the valuable discovery. Around this and the love affairs of his daughter, Mary, is woven one of the prettiest of stage stories.

Pathetic and touching were the illustrations of the methods of instructing blind children, and the exploits of the American snow plow in Norway were of unusual excellence. This week's program is certainly the best yet given luring this popular engagement.
