SIDELIGHTS ON THE REVOLUTION

May be American Money Behind the Uprising--Chances of the Pretender.

DUKE OF BRAGANZA.

Munch, Oct. 11.—Prince Miguel of Braganza, the pretender to the Portuguese throne, in an interview here asserts that the ringleaders of the revolution are not republicans, but "conservatives who were moved to take the present step by their hatred of the Liberals. Prince Miguel does not believe that the republic will last long. He was aware, he says, that the present movement was in preparation, but refused to take part in it while the existing dynasty was on the throne. There is some speculation, in view of the revolution now in force in Portugal, over the chances of Prince Miguel, who married Miss Anita Stewart of New York, for reaching the throne abandoned by King Manuel. Prince Miguel Maximilian Sebastian Mariz de Braganza was born on September 22, 1878, in Riehenau, lower Austria, and comes from the second branch of the house of Braganza. His grandfather was Prince Miguel of Portugal, and of Charlotte, the Infanta of Spain. King John's eldest son was Dom Pedro, who renounced his rights as King of Portugal in favor of his daughter, Maria, who became the first Emperor of Brazil. His son, a cousin of the present Prince Miguel, was the famous Dom Pedro, the last Emperor of Brazil, who was forced to abandon his throne and seek refuge in Europe in 1889. This makes Prince Miguel of semi-royal lineage. His mother was Princess Elizabeth of Thurn and Taxis, one of the mediocrity houses of Austria. On September 15, 1909, he married Miss Anita Stewart, of New York, in Dingwall, Scotland. Miss Stewart just previous to her marriage, was created a princess of the Austrian court in her own right. She was reported at that time to have brought a large fortune to her husband. Princess Braganza is a daughter of Mrs. Rhineland-Stewart-Smith; Stewart before she was divorced and Smith after she had been before the partition with "Silent," a southern partner with $50,000,000 or thereabouts. Miss Anita's father is also a multi-millionaire and Silent Smith left mother a cartload of his coin.

Now the question is asked: How much did "Silent" Smith's money figure in working up a first-class revolution in Portugal? FOND OF FISH. Poor as the peasants are to an American standard of life they are gay of spirit, hardy of body and epicures in respect to food. They prefer to eat fish. Their taste in olives knows all the fine shades of discrimination; dried cod fish is eaten with a keen relish for flavor, and their taste in wines (while not that of Paris) is excellent. The dried fish "bacal hau" has been the battleground of politicians, etymologists, financiers, fishermen and net-catchers. The Portuguese have consumed it in vast quantities with oil and pepper. It is both a luxury and a necessity, a delicacy and a staple. It has never occurred to the poor of Portugal that life without salt fish would be either possible or desirable. If the bays of Newfoundland or the floods of Norway were to fall half of Portugal, like the rice-eating Hindus would they go hungry rather than change their diet. It is eaten raw, it is eaten boiled, stewed, grilled, and with garlic. When eaten raw it is buttered and gnawed at noon; fishermen carry it to sea, as "coals to Newcastle"; it solves the Friday fast of good Catholics and graces his feast again on Sunday.

FARMERS ALL. Agriculture Pre-eminently the Occupation of the People—Their Courtesy and Kindness.

Celt, Roman, Goth and Saracen have poured their blood into Portugal and its difference from that of Spain are agreed to be mostly superficial. Both races are proud; the Portuguese is conceded to be more courteous; the Spaniard is held to be more dependable. It is in the smaller country that the peasantry are still the wealth of the land and the actual embodiment of the national character. To an American they are alternately an exasperation for their antiquated methods of agriculture. As Mark Twain said of the Azores farmer, "He prays not to be allowed to know more than his grandfather knew, and to plough with a sharpened stick as his grandfather ploughed." To an Englishman, read in the classics, the Portuguese farmer offers an almost literal preservation of the golden age of the classical pastoral. The pursuits of the vineyard, the field and the herd are here; and the very implements of the Roman, the grotesque and graceful superstitions persist, and the naive way of life. Instead of the distrustful politeness of towns, the traveller encounters an open-hearted candor and unconscious dignity. More than one has borne witness to this modern survival of a life which we know today only through Theocritus and Vergil; supposing, too, that theirs was a literary version of it. A small population of miners, of

SHE WAS SURPRISED
 When Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Cured her Chronic Liver Complaint

Mrs. R. Smith, of Winnipeg, Man., tells an interesting story of relief from almost intolerable sufferings: "I can hardly tell you how great my sufferings have been. Chronic liver complaint accompanied by biliousness was my daily source of trial to me. Every day experienced the sickening effects of these ailments. I longed for some medicine that should permanently drive them away. Hearing of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, I thought they were worthy of a trial. My surprise was indeed great. From the very first I experienced relief. Continuing with them I found my troubles were slowly but surely leaving me, and before long I once more knew what it was to be free from the harassing effects of the ailments that had long sickened and weakened me. So great is my faith in Dr. Morse's Indian Pills that I shall never on any account be without them." Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cure Bowel and Kidney as well as Liver troubles, and keep you healthy. See a box at your dealer's.

A Typical Hunt.
 An Englishman after one experience of a Portuguese hunt, defined the occasion as "the greatest amusement of the greatest number of men and the least expenditure of money." As it was his fortune to hunt again and often, he has furnished a composite picture of these occasions, worth noting for what it tells of the people. "In a long and vociferous line we range through the great pine forests, or the chestnut woods, poking our sticks into the matted gorse and clats, banging the tree trunks with resounding blows. The dogs hunt a little, wrangle, bark and fight a good deal, and would do so still more, but for the occasional flight into their midst of the ground, or thrown with random aim into the tall undergrowth. Several guns are fired off. Nothing is hit, not even a dog. Presently I make out a little animal which I should take for a very large rat. It is a full-grown Portuguese rabbit, cowering in a leisurely manner towards the gentlemen with guns stationed on a neighboring knoll. These sportsmen cock their pieces and aiming, apparently at the points of their own boots, fire. We run up and look. We find nothing but the hole of the burrow over which these gentlemen were mousing guard, and into which the rabbit has safely escaped."

CLOSING STOCK LETTER.
 By direct private wires to J. C. Macintosh & Co. ...
 New York, Oct. 11.—The largest volume and a better class of trading stock place in our market today and showed a good increase. The buying that took place yesterday afternoon was not only continued today but also increased by orders from commission houses. The market has not yet assumed position whereby the sentiment can be considered pronounced, but apparently bullish sentiment prevails, especially for the time being. The market shows evidence of wanting to rise and is waiting the action of larger interests to take hold and establish better prices. Bullish tips in various stocks are again being circulated and in some cases have turned out satisfactory, showing that there is an inclination to trade as soon as opportunity offers. There is no additional share that has not already been given out today. Considerable strength characterizes our market at the close.
