Brains and Capital

A
Partner's
Death

In every partnership there are two factors of great importance: the managing brain and the capital employed, and if death removes either the business must suffer. It often happens that the brain belongs to one man and the capital to another. If the manager dies the capital is worthless to another. If the capitalist dies and his capital is withdrawn, the manager is crippled. It is clear that each has an insurable interest in the life of the other because the profits of each depend in part upon the life of both. The firm should therefore insure for the benefit of the last man either the ten twenty plan or the natural premium life plan of the Manufacturers'. These are the plans best adapted to suit the requirements of such cases—let this statement be tested by comparison.
