POSSIBLY—and we're leaning over leftward—possibly the biggest belly-laugh in the whole course of modern history is Mackenzie King's seven-years-late blast against Communism. And especially this nonsense about Camp Shilo.

NO^T because the writer of the Now Column happens to have been born a few miles east of Shilo (Sewell, Camp Hughes, etc.) but because—after all these years—Mr. King is suddenly saying what the Now Column has been saying for all these years.

DO YOU know, at one time during the war there was serious suggestion that the editor of the Now Column should be haled before the tribunals for, in his column, having doubted the sincerity of our glorious ally, Soviet Russia? On record is a request from a very highly placed R.A.F. officer, then stationed in Canada, who wanted to see us yanked into court by the scruff of our pants and make us reveal where we got all this stuff about Moscow not being Canada's best friend.

HE HAD a whole lot of ribbons up, and we hope he's still alive. What's more, we hope he (an avid reader of the Now Column) is able to roll over in his bed and admit we were bloody well (his words) right. Canada, at long last, is refusing to reveal her training secrets to an enemy nation. An enemy nation!
