The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

The older I grow the more deeply I am impressed by the intertexture of character—that is, the invariable effect of self-indulgence and lack of control in any one direction upon the whole character.

For instance, I believe that the child who is freely allowed to give way to his temper in his youth, in nine cases out of ten, will be the man who gives free rein to his passion in his manhood.

And conversely, I believe that every time a man exerts control over himself in any way—overcomes passion, restrains temper, gives up some self-indulgence, masters his tongue when it would speak foolishly or unkindly, compels concentration, or in any way does the wiser, harder thing, instead of following the course of least resistance, he strengthens his whole character and increases his ability to do not only that particular thing, but each and everyone of these things again.

It seems to me it is as if a king should make some strong demonstration of his authority against a rebellious faction in one part of his kingdom, and should thereafter find it much easier to control other factions in the rest of his realm.

Let us imagine, for instance, a man whose doctor has told him he must walk more if he wants to keep well and strong and efficient. "Don't swing out to a street car every time you have a few blocks to travel," the physician has warned him. "Walk man. If you don't want to rust before your time, you've got to exercise more."

Let us also suppose that this man has a terrible temper, which all his life, he has had to fight to control. Now some cold unpleasant morning this man comes out of his office to go downtown for his lunch. It is only a fifteen-minute walk, and he knows he ought to walk it, but just as he comes out of the door he sees the downtown car stopping right in front of him and pumps on. No, I believe that this man, in doing that, has not only weakened his power to obey the doctor's orders another time, but has also lessened his ability to control his temper.

Suppose some other day this man has been put in a most irritating position and has managed to keep his temper. Don't you think that that success will help him not only to control his temper the next time, but also to do the right thing by his health?

I do. And because of this intertexture of character, I believe that mothers who are so unselfish that they get their children into habits of self-indulgence do their offspring far more harm than they realize. For the whole texture of the child's character is weakened.

Not only will he find it harder to be unselfish, but he will find it harder to control his temper and his tongue, to master his passions or to exert control over himself in any one of the thousand directions in which life will demand it of him.

Perhaps you are laughing at my psychology, and thinking my doctrine of the intertexture of character absurdly strained and overdrawn. If you are, I wish you would watch your own character, and see if my theory does not work out true.

Try to see if periods of self-indulgence in any one direction do not weaken your control in all directions; and efforts toward self-restraint and self-government in any one direction do not make you more the master of your whole great kingdom.

No Man is Stronger Than His Stomach

A strong man is strong all over. No man can be strong who is suffering from weak stomach with its consequent indigestion or from some other disease of the stomach and its associated organs, which impairs digestion and nutrition. For when the stomach is weak or diseased there is a loss of the nutrition contained in food, which is the source of all physical strength. When a man "doesn't feel just right," when he doesn't sleep well, has an uncomfortable feeling in the stomach after eating, is languid, nervous, irritable and despondent, he is losing the nutrition needed to make strength.

Such a man should use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It enriches the blood, invigorates the liver, strengthens the kidneys, nourishes the nerves, and so GIVES HEALTH AND STRENGTH TO THE WHOLE BODY.

You can't afford to accept a fake nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic medicine of known composition, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit. Ingredients printed on wrapper.

Fads and Fashions.

Russian blouse effects are in favor. New sleeves are both long and short.

Velvet and satin shoes have had their day.

Tunics are seen on many tailored street suits.

The reign of the chiffon waist is by no means over.

The lines of the spring gowns are undoubtedly fuller.

Striped and checked silks will be fashionable this season.

Strands of flowers hang from the neck in place of jabots.

The new skirt is draper or has the double or triple effect.

Silk takes a prominent place as hat trimming to form bows.

Pleatings of tulle, lace or net are used in every possible manner.

Satin and serge are combined in some of the new novel suits.

The suit of tulle will be the leading feature of spring style.

Bright greens are used a great deal especially for dinner gowns.

Trains complete the new evening gown, and the décolletage is cut low.

In many of the sashes chiffon roses are used in the bow at the waist.

Tiny silk flowers decorate black velvet bands to be worn about the throat.

The use of heavy lace and the touch of black are noticeable in the new blouse.

A large La France rose of pink satin is worn where the collar fastens in front.

On spring gowns there is a decided use of scallops, frills, shirrings and touches of black.

The collarless gown is just as much favoured as the model with the sheer yoke and stock.

The newest hat models show profuse ornaments of leaves, flowers, shirrings and feathers.

Bordered fabrics are seen in self and contrasting colors of all kinds of materials, and are very popular.

Clematis blue, which shades on the purple, and a violet of a twilight tint are used for evening gowns.

In the new blouse fullness is introduced at the elbows by means of puffed undersleeves of net or lace.

The "Wilhelmina" is the latest novelty in a more elaborate evening arrangement of the small Dutch cap.

A dainty girde of lovely ribbon encircling the waist gives an air of freshness and daintiness to a lingerie frock.

The white lace waist models have come to the front, and will be seen more and more as the season advances.

Hat brims, even in the widest hats, are being faced with satin or velvet. Colored velvets are often employed.

The return of the sash to full favor gives ribbon an important part to Malines on hats serve as a foundation for which to rest small flowers and berries, which are more attractive than ever.

THE MOON.

By H. L. RANN.

The moon is a large pink object which is used to inspire love and extract old e. s. sonnets and a blank verse from the amateur poet. Some very choice copyright poetry has been written about the moon, most of which is read aloud in a careless tone of voice just prior to securing father's consent. Some time ago the moon got into the habit of going around the earth on a dog trot several times a year, making all of the important cities, from Hong Kong to Cairo, Illinois, occasionally sitting down to rest and throwing the Lie's observatory into a pale blue fit. The moon should oversleep some morning, this world would bump into the millennial dawn without having time to put on a clean collar. The best time to view the moon is at the age of 19 from the upper deck of a rustic bridge, in company with some sympathetic soul in a starched shirt-waist. The moon does most of its traveling in a well-greased runway, called an orbit, and revolves on an axis which is of the full-floating type with three-quarter elliptical springs. It is also afflicted with mean intervals, some of which are meaner than others and are accompanied by wash-outs and cloudbursts. The moon can be had in several different sizes, but appears at its best when full, thus differing from most men of our acquaintance. Astronomy teaches us that when the moon gets full it never has to be undressed and put to bed. The moon is not inhibited by anybody of any consequence except coal gas and the prehistoric goat, which can be seen through a 4-inch telescope in the act of starving to death. In ancient times one of these goats leaped over a little too far and fell off just as the moon was passing over Ireland, thereby making a valuable contribution to our fauna and flora. The moon is used a good deal for sleighing parties and lawn socials, and usually furnishes all the light that is necessary.

100 Woodsmen Arrive.

The express which arrived here last night brought in about 100 lumber men who had been working in the woods at Jumper's Brook, Badger Brook, Norris Arm, Grand and Bishop's Falls and other places. The men are all Nova Scotians and French Canadians and had to walk 40 to 50 miles to catch the train. Over 100 others, all natives of the Colony, detained at Notre Dame Junction to walk to their homes. They report a rough and severe winter but that good cuts were made, and all will proceed home by the Bruce. The rivers are still frozen up but most of the logs are not ready for the great drives which will be in order with the approach of warm weather.

Bruce Leaves.

The S. S. Bruce left Sydney at midnight direct for St. John's. At 1 a.m. the ship wired the Reid Nfld. Co., as follows:—
"Low Point ahead, fresh E. S. E. wind; no ice in sight."

Gulf News.

From Postal Telegraphs.

"Curling reports that ice moved off shore; landmen could not get off to-day. Steamer about eight miles off moving about as if picking up pans of seals. The flag which the men saw was red, white and blue, perpendicular shape."

Steamer Wanted North.

Big freights are now offering for the Northward, and if a steamer four times the size of the Stella Maris were in commission she could not take the cargo now offering. Business people of the Northward are now loudly complaining as to the absence of opportunity to send goods forward, and something should be done to meet their wishes.

Train Notes.

The Millertown express and shore train combined left here at 6 p.m. yesterday with 100 passengers including about fifty sealers.

An express from Millertown Junction arrived here at 9:40 last night with about 120 passengers including a large number of lumber men.

The shore train arrived at 11 last night with several passengers.

Scenic Artist's Splendid Work.

Mr. Edmund Betts, the scenic artist, who was brought from New York by Manager Kiely, is turning out a series of splendid stage settings for the Selman Company's performances. On Monday he completed a very handsome drop curtain which will replace the old curtain that has seen so much service. Last evening he finished a very pretty setting which will be used in the presentation of "The Light that Failed." It shows the artist's cottage on the bank of the river Thames, with a view of the great city by twilight in the distance. Another very pretty scene is the setting of the interior of the artist's studio, where the famous masterpiece is painted. Each play will be a complete scenic production.

New Machine Working.

From passengers who arrived by the express last night we learn that the new machine put up at the Grand Falls mills the past winter is in operation and is working well. The output of pulp has been greatly accelerated and this new machine will enable the Company to increase their output of paper.
