The fair widow's report of her beauti-ful ward was, in Lance's present opin-ion, one to doubt on every point save in so far as he had himself been able to judge, and the discovery that Mrs, Mortimer was not wealthy was a keynote to the unpleasant suspicion that had crossed the young man's mind; but he wanted a further eluci-dation, and to that end he must write to Frank Heathcote as soon as he could—then, perhaps, for the first time in his life almost, the free steed felt the took of the bit. Lance had put himself into harnes; he was not per-fectly free to say, "No will I own, str."
