Object to the "Black Crook."

Porr Huron, Dec. 10.—Several ministers of this city have taken exception to the presentation of the "Black Crook" at the city opera house next Monday evening, and especially to their mode of advertising with showy lithographs representing female figures in the ballet. A number of the ministers called upon the prosecuting attorney and requested him to prevent its presentation, and that the lithographs about down be suppressed, claiming that they are obscene and contrary to the statute. The prosecuting attorney explained to them that even if the objectionable lithographs cane under the bun of the statute a conviction would be impossible, and advised them to let the matter rest. It is not likely that any further steps will be taken in the matter.

Great Thoughts by Great Thinkers. Discipline, like the bridle in the hand of a good rider, should exercise its influence without appearing to do so-should be ever active, both as a support and as a restraint, yet seem to be easily in hand.

—Another possible candidate for aldermanic honors has loomed up in No. 4 ward. This time it is Mr. Crawford, inspector for the Humane Society. In conversation with an ADVERTISER reporter Mr. Crawford stated that a deputation of "the boys" had approached him, stating that he had been chosen as a candidate for such a position. Mr. Crawford refused to accept the nomination as yet, because something may transpire which would require his time outside of civic affairs. When asked who or what society "the boys" represented, Mr. Crawford refused to answer.

—During the last month the interior of the King Street Presbyterian Church has undergone alteratious which add greatly to its appearance. A large platform, extending nearly from side to side, has been erected, and on this are seated the members of the choir and the organist. The pulpit, too, which was formerly situated to the extreme rear of the church, has now been placed to the front of the newlybeen placed to the front of the newly-erested platform. Common World.

—Since the resignation of Rev. Walter Roger in May the congregation of the King Street Presbyterian Church have been without a pastor. Many young and eloquent preachers have since that time occupied the pulpit on trial, and, as is well-known, a unanimous call was extended to Rev. Thos. Wilson, of Dutton. To the disappointment of all the call was refused at the meeting of the Presbytery in St. Thomas, but since then a number of applicants have been tried. Yesterday Rev. Mr. Robertson preached at both services and created a favorable impression on the congregation. Mr. Robertson, though but a young man, has already made his mark in the world, having been appointed assistant to Rev. Mungo Fraser in the pastorate of Knox Church, Hamilton. To-night a congregational meeting will be held in the oburch when it is avorabled. in the pastorate of Knox Church, Hamilton. To-night a congregational meeting will be held in the church, when it is expected a call will be extended—to whom it is uncertain, as there are three ministers who have preached equally well, namely: Revs. Messrs. Bell, Ross and Robertson. Owing to the illness of Rev. James Ballantyne, moderator of the London Presbytery, Rev. W. J. Clark will act in that capacity.

Anniversary Services.

Rt. Rev. Bishop Young, D.D., of Athabasca, N. W. T., preached two forceful and elequent sermons in the Memorial Church yesterday on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of that place of worship. The discourses were appropriate to the event, that of the morning being founded on verses S, 9 and 10 of Psalm, xevi., while the evening sermon was preached from part of the 9th verse of the 7th chapter of the Second Book of Kings. An entertainment will be held in the school room to-night, when the Bishop of Athabasca will give a descriptive address.

Bishop Hawkins, of Chatham, preached Bishop Hawkins, of Chatham, preached the anniversary sermons of the Colborne Street Church to two large congregations yesterday. Appropriate music was furnished by the choir. The bishop will tell his story of his slave days and escape from thraidom to-night. This is an interesting story and is always ably tool by this eloquent colored clergyman.

Wellington Street Methodist Church also celebrated their anniversary yesterday. The former pastor, Rev. G. W. Henderson, now of Windsor, preached at both services. Each of his sermons were characteristic efforts and the popular ex-pastor has lost none of his force of elequence since his removal to his present charge. Special collections were taken up.

A Finished Production.

A Finished Production.

The good taste of the more discriminating class of theater-goers was demonstrated Saturday night by the large patronage and sincere appreciation of the performance of "The Rivals." Sheridan's famous old comedy could not have been given a brighter setting than by the Drews and their admirable company. The very name of Mrs. John Drew is a talisman. In her delightful impersonation of that rare old piece of vanity and muddled English-Mrs. Malaprop—are revealed the touches of that genius which made her the worthy companion of Forrest, the elder Booth and other celebrities upon whom the curtain of life has long dropped. Mrs. Drew herself says she was a prodigy at eight—and that was over 60 years old. Time has been kind to her, for while sparing her remarkable physical vigor still, it has ripened her mind and mellowed her art, until to-day she is the queen of legitimate comedy on the American stage. Her Mrs. Malaprop is less a character sketch than a living reality, so complete is her absorption in the role. In the egotistical and dignified old belle, who arrogates to herself homage intended for her niece who is curiously ignorant, yet plumes herself on her learning; who is wise in her own connecti. The good taste of the more discrimi and dignified old belle, who arrogates to herself homage intended for her niece, who is curiously ignorant, yet plumes herself on her learning; who is wise in her own conceit, yet the but of general ridicule, the audience loses sighted Mrs. Drew and thinks only of Mrs. Malaprop. There is something exquisitely humorous in the unconsciousness with which she speaks of "Patience on a mantelpiesce," and rebukes the duelist for talking about honor in a woman's presence. Her son, Sidney Drow, inherits a large share of his mother's talents, if not her positive genius. His Bob Acres is more astuly than an inspiration, but it is a very effective creation, which keeps his hearers in roars of laughter. His charming and clever wife is a daughter of McKee Rankin, the local playwight. Born and reared in the profession, her natural dramatic instinct has heen tutored in an excellent school, and young as she is she has already won laurels, which the future will multiply. The other members of the company are sterling actors, and the result was a finished production not often enjoyed in the city. duction not often enjoyed in the city.
