Marauder Lame. Yesterday morning after a training performance seldom if ever equalled in Canada, dicap" to be run next Friday, pulled up lame as a tree. His trainer was unable to restrain his tears and a large concourse of people who a moment before had been chatting together in high spirits suddenly assumed the demeanor of mutes at a funeral. The subjoined extract from an English paragraphy. extract from an English paper gives a sketch of Hermit, and that Marauder's revival may be such as his was will be the earnest hope of very lover of a good horse and a spirited A hero is dead. All over England people

A hero is dead. All over England people are talking of the untoward event—people who eare in thing for the wars of Parliament and the strife of parties. Hermit was an equine hero of the first rank, and to the Englishman horse and dog are friends. As a yearling he was bought by Mr. Chaplin for 1000 guineas, and was first favorite for the Derby of 1867. He broke a blood-vessel shortly before the race, and was regarded as out of the running. But his trainer saddled the invalid for an off chance. The race was run in a snowstorm, and vast was the excitement and surprise when the cripple came galloping in the winner. Was there not some noble fibre in the horse, some great spirit which men possess, and which prompts them galloping in the winner. Was there not some noble fibre in the horse, some great spirit which men possess, and which prompts them to deeds of valor and exertion at extremity? Some horses must be braddied and drugged before a race, while Hermit goes from his sick stall and wins. No marvel that one of the oldest writers of antiquity spoke with pride and enthusiasm of the glory of the warking was clothed with thunder. horse whose neck was clothed with thunder, there is a light-hearted galety, an impetuous daring, a resolute confidence with which some herses face a leap, that makes it difficult to see in them anything but human qualities. How they glory in competition; how emulation excites them to splendid effort! The old favorite long ago sent to the farm or the paddock; for we hope to the cabinan or the knace becomes young at the sight of the hours her bent forelegs spring back with elasticity; she is like a grandmother at the sound of Roger de Coverley, for one glorious bour the past repeats itself. Is not a good horse better than a pad man!
