

seen, they never fail to command admiration and attract regard.

Not only is Mr. Tyler one of the most elegant writers in the country, but he is also one of its most fluent, eloquent, and brilliant orators. In happy, off-hand, extemporaneous speaking, he has seldom been equalled, and in more laboured and extended efforts he has but few rivals. While a senator in Congress, he took an active and prominent part in all the debates, and was uniformly listened to with great attention and profound respect. His manner is impressive on all occasions: affable in social intercourse, forcible in forensic efforts, and eloquent in public debate.

Having presented, briefly and imperfectly, some of the most prominent events and most striking peculiarities in the history and character of John Tyler, we appeal to you, the people of the United States, to say whether you will sustain your public servants in maintaining consistency of character, integrity of heart, and firmness of purpose, when assailed under the most trying circumstances; whether you will sanction the attempt to reduce your chief magistrate to the mere tool of a dictator in the Senate; whether you will justify a few party leaders, under the control of such a dictator, to prolong your sufferings merely to spite a rival for your favour, and to sport with your great interests as mere pawns in the game for the presidency! Will you suffer those leaders, if determined, in their idolatrous zeal, upon self-im-
