In these days of sneezes the war is forced to take rather a back seat while the citizens in general discuss at great length the Spanish influenza raid. Ruth noticed that Brian was listening.

"I think Mr. Beckly was very good to ask us. It isn't every young man who wants an old married couple with him when he asks a young lady to dinner even the the man does happen to be the young lady's lawyer."

"She's game, all right," Brian said to himself as he sat down, and there was a feeling of pride that, in spite of himself, found expression in his voice as he added:

"Not much of a lawyer yet, Ruth."

"Enough of one, I- guess, to attend to any business Mollie can have," Claude Beckly's sarcasm was not lost upon Ruth.

Molife King, tactful as she was, blushed at the implication, but, quickiy recovering herself, said brightly:

"Is this your first visit here, Mrs. Hackett?" If it is, we must point out our celebrities to you."

"I never have been here before," Ruth replied. "Please tell me all I should know!"

"Yease tell me all I should know!"

"Claude is about as famous a character as we have," Mollie said with a mischlevous glance at Beckly. "He both writes and paints." "How interesting!" murmured Ruth, thinking if he didn't write more sensibly than he talked, it might account in part for his frayed appearance.

"Yes, you must get him to write some poetry not for you, but to you," Monie added, her eyes twinkling.

Evidently she sees thru his pretence as well as I, Ruth thought, and was rather pleased that the woman whom her husband admired was not dense. It would be impossible to be at all at her ease with a stupid woman. She would not know what to say to her.

The only time she had seen Mollie she had thought her very pretty and bright. It had been at the dinner Mrs. Curtis gave. But now she was more critical. She wanted to know well this woman whom Brian seemed to like so much. Not that she wished for any intimacy; that was farthest from her thoughts. She wanted to understand her character—her point of view.

So as Mollie told her of the different people dining, she watched the while she listened. Mollie's speech, while in a way refined and showing education, was plentifully sprinkled with a gay, innocuous sort of slang that gave it point. She occasionally told a story about some one of whom she was speaking, and told it well.

WILSON BIDES OCCASION

TO REPLY TO ENEMY

Washington, Oct. 9 .- Military men are vastly pleased over the president's refusal even to discuss an armistice while German soldiers remain on invaded soil anywhere, thus very flatly replying to that phase of Prince Maximilian's overtures, altho the note despatched yesterday was in the form of an enquiry.

The president is known to be ready to act without delay when the German chancellor has answered the pointed questions asked in that note-whether the chancellor in asking for peace negotiations accepts unequivocally the terms of peace already laid down, and whether he speaks for the German people themselves or only for their military masters.

Officials said today that the presi dent has no thought of entering into a series of unfruitful diplomatic exnanges with the Germans.
