W. C. T. U. MEETING

Regular Semi-Monthly Gathering Held Tuesday Afternoon.

W. C. T. U.

The regular semi-monthly meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held in Somerset Hall at 8 p.m. In the absence of Mrs. McDermid her place was most ably filled by Mrs. Thornley. There was a good attendance of members present, and after opening exercises and minutes read and other business attended to, Mrs. Heaman laid the plans for the new building on the table, to be examined, and where desired, explained. The topic for the day, presented by Mesdames Thornley, McAllister and Wright, was stirring news from the World's Moral Battlefields.

This proved an appropriate title, for the papers read. All of these were of the most hope and courage inspiring nature.

Some of them were funny, too, and this item may interest:

John P. Hanson, American consular agent at Neuvas, Cuba, being refused permission to put up a canteen inside the reservation, placed one just outside and gave it into the charge of a Cuban who spoke no English, and instructed him to give the soldiers credit up to $5 each.

The soldiers took advantage of the bartender's ignorance, and when the agent returned he found the purchases charged up to Andrew Carnegie, Grover Cleveland, Elihu Root, et al. When Hanson found these statesmen's and millionaires' names on his books he berated the manager, who thereupon decamped with the cash.

"Fearless folk, too, these temperance fanatics," said one of the speakers, "as witness the following delivered by Judge McKenzie Cleland, before the Liquor Dealers' Protective Association at their annual banquet in the Sherman House, Chicago:

"People have a prejudice against the saloon today, and the reason is that the liquor business is regarded as an habitual and persistent violation of the law. I was delighted when the president of your association stated that your organization stood for the preservation of the law."

I was told by one saloonkeeper with whom I remonstrated for selling liquor to an inebriate. "But I can't take time to find out whether a man is an habitual drunk or not. Besides, if I am arrested the association will defend me." (Cries of "No! no!") If that is not true you, gentlemen, ought to let the public know it. There is a lawyer in my court who drinks when he feels like it. He is a good fellow, and I asked him this morning, what I would say to you gentlemen here tonight, and that is that ninety per cent of the cases in this court are due to whisky. If there were no saloons this court would be without business."

Fourteen years ago the Anti-Saloon League, a non-partisan political force was started and now comes this prophetic wall from Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Magazine:

"The anti-saloon will capture the churches, the churches will capture the state, then God have mercy upon us, if we are permitted to live at all."

It will be a surprise to our liberty loving Canadians that the people of Finland rightly consider themselves the most advanced country in the world, inasmuch as there women are fully enfranchised and are members of congress. They are even better off than the men, for they pay only half the poll tax the latter do, and are given the same privileges.

NEARLY ALL INFANTS are more or less subject to diarrhea and such complaints while teething, and as this period of their lives is the most critical, mothers should not be without a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dientery Cordial. This medicine is a specific for each and every ailment of the stomach or bowels. It is high in value, and of those who have used it. The proprietors claim it will cure any case of cholera or summer complaint.

A bridal coach costing $1,800 has been finished by a Bridgeport, Conn., manufacturer for a liverman at Pittston, Pa. The vehicle is upholstered with red velvet, and has twenty seats, and has twenty hearts on it. There are heart-shaped windows, two large hearts for the dashboard and the rear springs are heart-shaped. Two cups surmount the lamps.

PICNICKED AT PORT

Lawson & Jones Held Annual Outing at the Lakeside.

The employees of Lawson & Jones held their annual picnic at Port Stanley on Saturday. In the morning the married men defeated the single men in a wonderful game of baseball by a score of 35 to 10. The following were the winners of the sports events on the programme:

Apprentices' race, under 16—Major 1, McKenzie 2, Truesdale 3. Single men's race, 100 yards—Stanley 1, Pearson 2, Hawthorne 3. Married men's race, 100 yards—Myers 1, Hewitt 2, Dyson 3. Girls' race, 50 yards—Miss Hodgins 1, Miss Corrin 2, Miss Hodgins 3. Dressing race, 300 yards—Richardson 1, Talbot 2, Pinney 3. Hop, step and jump—Pearson 1, Hawthorne 2.

Blind pig race, 75 yards—Miss Neilson 1, Miss Evans 2, Miss L. Corpe 3. Wheelbarrow race, 75 yards—Pinney 1, Hewitt 2, Myers and Richardson 3. Chocolate race—Miss Whitcroft 1, Miss Neilson 2, Miss Beck 3.

Duck race—Truesdale. Comic baseball match—Won by Oliver's team.

A lady's umbrella was given by Mr. J. W. Bawling for the person guessing the number of beans in a bottle, Miss Donnelly winning the prize.

Mr. Hiram Thompson won a gentleman's umbrella presented by Mr. Ray Lawson for the most popular man in the shop.

REST FOR THE WEARY

The Highlands of Ontario Reached by the Grand Trunk is a Paradise.

"It is gratifying to know," said a representative of the Grand Trunk Railway, "that the people of London appreciate the superior train service that our company is now providing from London to Toronto, and more particularly to the Northern Ontario tourist resorts, as is shown by the increased patronage we are receiving."

"Why, you may leave London at almost any hour in the day for Toronto, and since the inauguration of the Ontario Limited, with its splendid equipment of solid vestibuled coaches and buffet parlor cars, leaving London at 9:00 a.m., arriving at Toronto 12:15 noon, and returning, leaving Toronto at 4:15 p.m., arriving in London at 7:30 p.m., London people have patronized it even more than we had expected."

"We are also taking particular good care of the many hundreds of Londoners who take their annual trip to the Northern Ontario tourist resorts. Imagine leaving London at 7:30 a.m. and making one change at Hamilton to a fast, through solid vestibuled train with buffet and cafe parlor cars and arriving at almost any of the Muskoka or Lake of Bays resorts in time for supper, or if going to Penetang, this same train carries a through parlor car from Toronto, arriving at Penetang 2:45 p.m."

"Why then spend hundreds of dollars and waste weeks of time visiting the Killarney or Switzerland, when at our very doors there are places endowed by nature that fairly rival these far-famed countries?"

"Here in our own country (in the Northland), are hills and dales interspersed with lakes, that are dotted with islands and that have shores of glistening sands, with almost virgin forest in the immediate background for shade, where the weary may rest after a dip in the placid water."

A call on either Mr. E. De la Hooke or Mr. E. Russo, the representatives of the G. T. R. here, will repay intending travelers.

J. BULL GET U. S. HYMNS AND PILLS

Former London Pastor Describes Scope of English Purchases at Chautauqua.

Chautauqua, N. Y., July 24.—From cocktails an "He liver pills to church hymns, America has satisfied most of England's wants—social, economic, and religious—according to the Rev. C. F. Aked, the former Londoner who is now pastor of the Fifth Avenue Church, New York.

With "Jonathan to John," the Service of America to England," as the subject of his address at the Chautauqua assembly today he poked some fun at J. Pierpont Morgan, the "Morganeer," besides asserting that the American hymns are doggerel, and giving a recipe for getting men to church.

"When I came to this country in 1902," said Dr. Aked, "your J. Pierpont Morgan was then engaged in 'Morganeering' the English steamship lines, reaching out his hands for the pennies in the subway, and annexing pretty nearly every other English enterprise. I am informed that there were projects on foot to buy the tower of London for the next world's fair, to purchase Westminster Abbey for a museum in Central Park, while capitalists were planning to acquire the Queen's residence and anchor it in Lake Michigan as a dormitory for the University of Chicago. Why, so successful was Morgan's 'Morganeering' that the English people carried pennies 'allowing the bearer to walk about on the earth,' signed by J. P. M."

America Guides English Home.

"As for the everyday Britisher," continued Dr. Aked, "he rises in the morning from his American felt mattress, puts on his Connecticut underwear, his New York trousers, which he holds up by Massachusetts suspenders, and congratulates his wife on the way her Philadelphia straight-front matches her Brooklyn shirt-waist. After partaking of some Baltimore oysters he eats Kansas City bacon while the children eat American cereals, all the time reading a newspaper printed by a Schenectady press on Detroit-made paper, and edited by a yellow journalist from New York City."

"Taking an electric car of the Pittsburgh type, he is transferred to a Chicago elevator, at last getting to his office, where he sits down in his Nebraska chair at his Michigan roll-top desk, and signs his letters written on a Syracuse typewriter with a New York fountain pen."

"If it any wonder that we Britishers are ready to believe the saying that America is bounded on the north by the aurora borealis, on the south by the Antarctic Ocean, on the east by the rising sun, and on the west by the judgment day?"

Many Hymns Are Doggerel.

"In America most of your hymns are doggerel," said Dr. Aked. "You are still singing trash in many of your churches. There are any number of beautiful hymns, but you don't dare to use them. They are too liberal, too free, too human. Your hymnals are rubbish compared with those in England, because you are afraid to use the beautiful religious poems which your own writers have given to the world."

"Most of the best English hymns are, curiously enough, the best English hymns contain 121 hymns by American poets. Half of the religious life of England for the generation past is due to American influences. America gave England a Moody, who gave us Henry Drummond. He was the one who showed us that a young man's religion is not the same as that of his maiden aunt. As soon as a preacher learns that there will be people in his audience who don't wear bonnets."

MISS WATTS HONORED AGAIN

Presented With an Address and Given Handsome Present.

Miss Annie Watts, of D. S. Perrin & Co., was yesterday made the recipient of a handsome present by the employees of the factory. The address was read by Mr. Thos. McFarland, while Miss Mabel Wilson presented the gift.

"Dear Friend,—We have met in this company today to bid you farewell as you are about to leave for the great west."

"It is the earnest desire of our hearts that great success may attend you, and may your greatest joy be found in helping and cheering those with whom you come in contact."

"We recognize your value as a faithful worker, and esteem the example which you have set before your fellow-employees."

"As an expression of our esteem and good wishes, we ask you to accept this diamond ring, hoping that it may be an endless bond of friendship."

"Signed on behalf of your friends, 'MABEL L. WILSON, 'AGNES J. COCHRANE, 'London, July 24, 1907."

A BENEFACTOR TO ALL.—The soldier, the sailor, the farmer, the miner, the farmer, the mechanic and all who live lives of toil and spend their existence in the full routine of tedious tasks, and who are exposed to injuries and ailments that they do not know, will find in Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil an excellent friend and benefactor in every time of need.

This letter was received at the post-office department in Washington. The letter came from a western postmaster at a small office and read: "In accordance with the rules of the department I write to inform you that on next Saturday I will close the postoffice for one day, as I am going on a bear hunt. I am not asking your permission to close up and you can discharge me if you want to. But I will advise you now that I am the only man in the county who can read and write."

IN THE SHADOW OF THE GALLOWS

"Lord" Barrington Has for Four Years Successfully Fought Death Sentence.

Jefferson City, Mo., July 24.—For a man without money, station or influence and with the long criminal record in many countries and branches of crime behind him, Barrington's fight for his life has been remarkable.

Although the records of Scotland Yard and the bureau of criminal statistics in this country have yielded up data about Barrington and his career of crime, showing him to have at least a score of aliases and a trail of miscellaneous misdeeds in Europe, Asia and America, the rogue has had enough plausibility to impress persons of intelligence with the justness of his professions of innocence.

With their aid and the shrews which have enabled him to engage counsel, he has fought the conviction of murder in the first degree from court to court, even to the highest in the land. The crime for which Barrington was to satisfy the law with his life next Thursday was the murder of the man who had befriended him when almost the entire city spurned him and held him in contempt for his exploded pretensions of gentility, by which he had hoodwinked into marrying him a foolish American girl.

On the night of June 19, 1903, he murdered McCann in a lonely quarry in the little village of Bonifils, 14 miles out in St. Louis County, on the St. Charles and Western Railroad. For this he was arrested June 23, 1903, released on June 25, rearrested two days later and tried and convicted and sentenced to die March 5, 1904.

Barrington's attorneys appealed his case to the Missouri supreme court and the sentence of the lower court was affirmed. His sentence was set for March 15, 1906. The governor granted him a respite until June 26, 1906, and again friends came to his aid, raising funds with which to take the case to the United States Supreme Court on a stay of execution.

The findings of the trial court were again sustained and Barrington's last hope—in the law at least—died when the state supreme court handed down a mandate fixing the day of execution as July 25.

From Turnbridge Wells, assizes, in 1870, when he was 10 years old, to the Clayton circuit court, in the new world, in 1903, in the prime of his life, Barrington's history has been a succession of persistent and profitless crime.

Criminal All His Life.

Within three years of four decades, the incomplete records of his crimes—for there is a hiatus during the time he is supposed to have been in India and Africa—show that for 37 years he has persevered in his lawlessness with a consciousness that would almost seem to argue some neurotic quality in him.

But Barrington's career has been that of an arch bungler in crime. His life has been a progression of jail and penitentiary sentences for infractions of the law, ranging from embezzlement and burglary to the meaner crimes of deception practiced on English women and the cowardly murder of his benefactor.

In spite of this long record of bootless crimes, in which one sentence followed another until a goodly portion of his life has been spent behind prison bars, Barrington has a fair claim to the title of the most remarkable criminal of the age. How he has been in the public eye of St. Louis, and, indeed, the United States, since the day he blandly flashed on the clerk of the Southern Hotel his visiting card announcing himself as Frederick Seymour Barrington, lieutenant-colonel of the Horse Guards, London, Southwest, is a story of one farcical romance ending in the police court and the rock pile, and succeeded by a graver crime which has brought him at the present time in the shadow of the gibbet.

In his more than four years of imprisonment in the Clayton jail Barrington has never ceased to protest his innocence of the murder or to assert his belief that McCann is alive and will yet be found in India.

In the face of evidence conclusive and convincing to most who know the circumstances, he persists in the time-worn story he used in his defense with the same persistent fatuousness that has characterized his bungling career.

Claims to Gentility.

Only one concession has he made in the face of the exposure of his claims to noble birth. That is to disclaim that he ever passed himself off as an English nobleman. He robes Melrose Castle and the British peerage, but still persists that he is of respectable family, although he admits that the name he goes under is not his own. His real name he will not divulge because he says he does not wish to bring disgrace upon his mother, who is still living.

But his friends, of whom he has several loyal and fast ones, are not so reticent about his family history. One of them, Mrs. Madeline Gates, of West Belle-pla, asserts that his real name is Frederick Barrington Seymour; that his family is of the English gentry and that the long criminal record attributed to the prisoner is not his. Another friend, Percy Treasler, who has come all the way from Canada to try to help Barrington escape the gallows, declares that Barrington, or Seymour, is a hero of Indian and South African campaigns, having served with the Strathcona Horse in the Boer war.

Barrington's earlier boasts included that of an army career in India and South Africa. It is believed that in some brief interval between sentences in English prisons he was valet to a colonel of a regiment stationed in India, and later in South Africa, and his evident knowledge of the customs and languages of those countries bears out his assertion that he has been in them. Indeed, the English police say that he was suspected of murdering his officer in India, but the crime was never fastened upon him.

NO HARD COAL 75 YEARS HENCE

Expert Says Anthracite Deposits Will Be Exhausted by That Time.

Washington, D. C., July 24.—Edward T. Parker, the coal expert of the United States geological survey, predicts that at the present rate of consumption the anthracite deposits of the United States will be practically exhausted in 75 years. He urges manufacturers to use bituminous coal and declares that the smoke nuisance will soon be abated as a result of experiments now being conducted in New York.

"Hard coal will never be cheaper to consumers than it is now," said Mr. Parker. "The production of anthracite in 1906 was 63,645,010 tons. According to one coal expert, the anthracite available for mining in 1901 was 4,765,216,750 tons."

Commenting on these figures, Dwight T. Randall, engineer in charge of smoke abatement, geological survey, said:

"There is evidently not enough anthracite coal in the country for power purposes in the large cities of the east. In 1905 New York City burned 9,000,000 tons of anthracite coal and 2,500,000 tons of bituminous. This ratio has already changed and will continue until bituminous coal is in the ascendancy. It is estimated that New York and Philadelphia are now using one-fifth of the total yearly production of anthracite. Thus it is seen that we must conserve the hard coal if we wish it to last any length of time."

"We have found it entirely feasible to abate smoke in power plants, great and small," continued Mr. Randall, "but it is next to impossible to prevent smoke issuing from the chimneys of residences burning soft coal. Therefore, it would seem that the logical thing would be to utilize the rapidly-waning supply of hard coal for the homes and use the soft coal in the factories and power plants. The real problem before the east is the abatement of smoke from soft coal. New York is now showing that this can be done in the experiments that are being conducted by the New York Edison Company."

"There are a number of ways to solve the smoke evil. The burning of soft coal by improved methods in large, central heating stations, in place of many small, poorly-conducted plants, is one of the promised solutions of the problem. In a number of cities these plants have been installed and are doing good work. Another method is to convert the fuel into gas and coke at a big plant, selling the gas and coke (both of which are smokeless) to the consumers. Still another method is the establishment of great gas producers, gas engines, and electric generators at the coal mines, the gas producers operating the engines and the latter in turn the generators, sending the electricity to the cities for power, light, and heating purposes. Electricity can be sent in this manner a distance of 250 miles. It also is hoped that in the near future the railroads will use such power in operating their trains. This would do away with a big part of the smoke nuisance."

TAUGHT IN ONE SCHOOL 50 YEARS.

A headmaster for half a century in the Cambridge schools is the remarkable record of Basil H. Fletcher, of the Thorndike school, East Cambridge. On Thursday he will graduate his 50th class from that school.

For 58 years he has taught school, beginning in 1849. He came to Massachusetts in 1852, taught school two years in Abington, two years in Quincy and then began his long service in Cambridge. That service was started in the Otis school, for which a record was made of 167 years after and the name changed to the Thorndike school, so that his service has been practically in the one school.

When the city of Cambridge erected two new school buildings four years ago, known to him the pupils of his school circulated a petition that one of the new schools be named in honor of the headmaster to whom they were so devoted. The decision of the school committee to comply with their request was prompt and unanimous. The Fletcher school graduates its first class on Tuesday, and Mr. Fletcher will be a guest of honor on that occasion.—Boston Herald.

The total number of cabin and steerage passengers landed at the port of New York during the year 1906 by all the transatlantic steamship lines was 1,159,551. In 1905, 992,065 were landed which gives this year's total ended the record by a margin of 167,486.

It seems to be a solemn fact that a certain popular expression is hurting the lemon trade. Whereas there was formerly no more hesitation about asking for a lemon than for any other kind of fruit people acquainted with the vernacular now pass on and buy some other variety. At least so say some of the dealers.

Some exclusive London clubs purvey ginger ale that vies in delicate crispness with York Springs Dry Ginger Ale, but does not equal it in purity nor excel it in flavor, pungency and aroma. Try it with Rye or Scotch, or straight, or with a dash of lemon juice—simply fine! Your club, favorite bar or merchant can procure it for you. Demand it by name.
