

FIVE LITTLE COLORED "KIDDIES" LOOKING FOR A HOME.

In his long career of unique experiences, Inspector Sanders now finds himself with the most unique of all experiences on his hands. Or, rather, he has five colored kiddies—the five shown in the row above—to provide homes for. The inspector often finds it necessary to look after one or two colored children, but never during his term as inspector of the Children's Aid Society has he found himself in such a predicament as at present. It is quite a difficult matter to provide a home for a colored child. The colored population of Ontario is small, and there are but few colored homes without children.

The little ones are all bright and intelligent, and they are being looked after properly by the society and the inspector. The little girl's name is Gladys, while the boys are named, Fred, George, Arthur and Ernest. Fred is Gladys' brother. The other three are brothers.

They are all from Middlesex County, and were taken from parents who cruelly neglected them. In good homes they will undoubtedly grow up to be good citizens, but if left in their former surroundings they could learn nothing but evil.

Mr. Sanders has advertised the little ones for adoption in the local papers, and so far has had a couple of applicants.

DIED VERY SUDDENLY

Mr. Michael Connor, of St. George Street, Succumbs to Heart Failure

One of the best-known employees of the Grand Trunk Railway passed away at his home, 242 St. George street, on Sunday, in the person of Mr. Michael Connor.

The deceased, who had been for 50 years in the employ of the G. T. R. roundhouse, died very suddenly. He had been in his usual good health up till a few minutes before his death, when he was suddenly attacked by heart failure.

The late Mr. Connor was 71 years of age, and was highly respected by all who knew him.

He was born in Ireland, coming to London when quite a boy, and he saw the city of London grow from a small village to its present proportions.

He is survived by two sons, Arthur Connor, the Richmond street grocer, and Alfred, of San Antonio, Texas, and three daughters, all of this city.

The funeral will be held on Tuesday afternoon, and will be private.

VICTIMS OF RUNAWAY ACCIDENT WILL RECOVER

Mr. George Evison and Mr. Dennis Flannagan, the two victims of Friday's runaway accident, are progressing very favorably. It was thought at first that Mr. Evison's injuries were very serious, but Dr. Ford says that no complications have set in, and it is now hoped that he will be around again in a few days.

Mr. Flannagan, too, is making good progress. He is suffering from the shock, but the broken bones are setting nicely, and he, too, will probably soon recover.

Local Preachers Draw Lessons From the Wreck

Reid's Crystal Hall Disaster Furnishes Themes For Many Pulpits on Sunday.

Almost all the city ministers dealt with Tuesday's disaster in their services yesterday. Some made it the subject of special sermons, while all referred to it in some way, showing how God's lessons could be learned even in the catastrophes of life.

In Dundas Center Methodist Church last evening Rev. E. B. Lancelley preached on the subject, "Tuesday's disaster, a rainbow in the sky." The texts chosen were: Genesis xlii, 36; "We have ye bereaved of my children; Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away; all these things are against me," and Exodus xv, 25; "The waters were made sweet."

The reverend gentleman pointed out how the terrible disaster led all to think of the uncertainty of life, and the necessity of rendering an account before the great white throne.

"It is not of the dead that I would speak, but to you who remain," he said.

The speaker illustrated how our judgments are often mistaken when the viewpoint is wrong. Jacob had the wrong viewpoint. He saw Joseph's coat dipped in blood, and thought him dead, so Jacob mourned, being mistaken in the real facts.

"There is a man here tonight," continued Mr. Lancelley, "who mourns the loss of something he had a week ago, but with God as a partner, won't the thing return, as Joseph did long years ago?"

"Changes come, but when we look at the loss in the large religious hope, don't we find ourselves mistaken in the facts?"

"But there is one here who has been bereaved, Joseph is not here, and there is much weeping and distress. 'You're wrong, mother,' continued the preacher, and he told eloquently how God raised up those who, like Joseph fell into a pit, and placed them at his side.

"More than half our mourning comes through misconception. To look at life through a smoked glass is a crime against ourselves, our family and our God," said Mr. Lancelley.

He went on to speak of the joy of the children of Israel on seeing the water of Marah, and their great sorrow when it proved brackish and unsatisfactory. Things are the same today, our Marah is spoiled, but just as God sweetened the water of old, he can and is sweetening our sorrows today.

"God often places us in difficult positions that he may reveal himself in a fuller measure. The joy of God's consolation was beautifully shown on Tuesday when down under ruins, a man unable to extricate himself, sang the beautiful words of 'Nearer, My God, to Thee.' Let us trust in God, and the bitter water will be made sweet."

The church quartet, consisting of the Misses Reed and Lancelley, and Messrs. Brown and Walker, sang beautifully before the sermon, while Mr. Hodgins sang the solo, "Does Jesus Care?" with much feeling, at the close of the service.

Rev. Dr. Johnston.

At St. Andrew's Church last evening Rev. Dr. Johnston, of Montreal, formerly pastor of that church, preached a sermon dealing with such sudden and unexpected calamities as that which befell this city in the Reid's Crystal Hall disaster of last week. The sermon was practically the same one which he had preached a few days after the terrible city hall disaster, nine years ago, when so many lives were lost. The preacher took as his text, II Timothy, iv, 7: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith." Dr. Johnston began by making brief reference to the custom of the ancient Egyptians who introduced a skeleton during great feasts and celebrations as a grim reminder that death must come to all alike. "Such reminders," said he, "are in no wise inopportune for all men and at all seasons, and are far from inopportune."

tune for us in view of the catastrophe which not only plunged seven souls into eternity, but brought sorrow upon a whole city. Whatever experience misses or meets us while going through life, grim death comes with its call to the door of every man's house, not only at the cottage of the poor but the castle of the rich alike.

"If you build a house and find that your foundation has been poorly laid, you may take it down and build another. If you enter upon a business venture and afterwards find that it is a failure, you may try some other venture. Even in so serious a matter as character-building, after you have built for years, and find that you have been building in the wrong direction, and that better things might have been attained, you may turn around and build in another direction. But there is one experience which we all must meet, and which gives us no second opportunity, and that is death, for as the tree falls so shall it lie. Wise, therefore, is the man who prepares himself so that death will not overtake him unexpectedly, and unready to face his God. There are many ways in which the person really in earnest may look with the eyes of the wise upon the passing funerals and may listen to the toll of the bells, and may in this way have the great reality of death brought nearer to his heart. It is in order that everyone of us should learn tonight, what it is that makes the deathbed of the Apostle Paul was not derived from his surroundings, but was rather, in spite of his surroundings. The source of Paul's strength was in his unselfish occupation, with his noble life's work down to its very close."

At this juncture the speaker took occasion to refer to the writing of Rutherford, who said in one passage that it was a very terrible thing for a man to die with his everyday clothes on. Dr. Johnston took issue with this statement, and asked: "How can a man die better than at his daily toil? I do not think it a terrible thing for a man to die with his everyday clothes on, busy up to the last minute with his honorable toil. It only the work or the transaction in which we are engaged is such that we could die with it into the very presence of God himself, then I take it that it is the best thing for us to die in our everyday clothes. All Paul's work was his Master's, and in that he was what he died to the close of his life. If a man's business is in the warehouse, over the counter (as it was with some accident), it that of the holy and as sanctified as that of the preacher of the Gospel. Look at all your pleasures and your pursuits, and ask yourself if all is that which you would like before God himself. Is all your life so intimately lived with your Master that which overtook your fellow townsmen, when he overtake you it would not be an unpleasant surprise."

Returning to the life of Paul, and especially to the last part of it, Dr. Johnston commented upon the satisfaction with which the apostle looked back over his life. Paul had sought the success which comes from service and sacrifice to Christ, and to Christ's cause; all else in life was made subservient. Paul did not care what the world thought of his life. He did not care about the talents undervalued or what others considered the opportunities lost—none of them counted in his case.

In closing, Dr. Johnston referred to Paul's anticipation of a great reward, which was based on God's great faith, what verse, or what word of truth is there," he asked, "wherein, in such an hour as death overtakes you, you can feel that you have cast your anchor of hope on solid rock? Then, well is it for you if you have cast your anchor where it will hold. It means let go of the earth and die Calvary. Look to the cross and the wall. Stand not on sanctification, but on justification. The secret of triumphant living is Christ, and the secret of triumphant death is Christ. Christ is the end and Christ is the beginning. He is yours if you trust Him. Cast the anchor of your faith in Christ—the foundation that God alone
