GRAND CHRISTMAS SHOW. Display at St. Lawrence Market Better Than Ever.

With Christmas is indelibly associated the idea of good food for the table which go so far to make this the festive season of the whole year.

The recurrence of the annual event is forested by the stocks through the city, but nowhere is it thrown out in stronger relief than at the city market.

Old St. Lawrence has witnessed many Christmases, has done its part in brightening the Yule Tide period for its neighbours of a century, but it can truthfully say that no previous year has made such elaborate preparations for the people of Toronto to do an illegal act injurious to public trade.

At first sight one almost questions whether the demand for such elaborate displays, by the market, is not a case of the old saying, "The more you give, the more you get." The fact is, however, that the market is a case of the old saying, "The more you give, the more you get."
