Strikes and Justice.

(Los Angeles Times.)

It is not enough merely to settle the cool and railroad strikes; the point of overwhelming importance is to settle these strikes in the right way. Especially with regard to the relation between the men who quit work and the men who have remained at work.

The history of many strikes has been stained with bitter injustice in the final phase. The strikers have quit work, often to the severe suffering and danger of an innocent public. Independent workmen have come in, often at the risk of their lives, to carry on the work abandoned by the strikers. When the strike has been settled, very often these men have found themselves the targets of a persecution that has made it impossible for them to continue in the work. They have found themselves penalized for their courage and loyalty. They have found themselves pariahs bounded out of their jobs by a menacing conspiracy of the men who struck and returned. Often they have been discriminated against by the very corporations in whose behalf they struggled and fought.

It is essential that, in this strike, no such incident occur. The strike must be settled and settled as quickly and as peacefully as possible. It should be settled in a manner to leave no wounds or sore places, if that can be done. But this soothing balm must not be applied at the expense of a great principle.

The position of the strike-breakers and the position of the men who remained loyal and refused to strike involve something deeper even than justice to the men who did not strike.

The very foundations of American industrial life are involved in the settlement of this strike. In some instances the strike-breakers have fought their perilous fight in conscious and deliberate defence of a principle. In other cases they have been actuated by less exalted ideals. Nevertheless, the underlying principle is the same. It has been a fight to determine whether or not the independent workman has a right to sell his labor when and where it seems fit and proper to him; or whether the industries of America are to be under the control of a coterie of labor union politicians ruthlessly brushing aside the rights granted by the constitution to every workman.

When this strike is settled it is essential that the rights of the men who took the strikers' places be fully and justly protected.

Hope For Mexico.
(Baltimore American.)

The department of commerce supplies the world with some unusual information. It is that baseball is supplanting bull fighting as a sport in the hearts of the Mexicans. Cited in point is Chihuahua, where a recent Sunday game of baseball drew five thousand attendants, more than were registered in the palmy days of the local bull ring. The bull ring languishes, and it has been necessary to enlarge the baseball grounds. There has not been much news of Mexico recently, and the impression seemed to be that stagnation had set in, but manifestly things are better than we thought. With baseball on the boom and bull-fighting on the slump, Mexico is headed for a handier day.
