Marius waited a long while. Pungent odisors of old paper lingered around him. The apartment was miserably filthy, and the bareness of the walls gave it a lugulation aspect. Dust was heaped in the corners, and spiders were spinning their webs on the ceiling. The young man was almost stifled; the scratching of the sanking house, he became the manager of a body of usurers, of a scoundrelly band which entrusted him with funds. The combination was of a patriarchal simplicity. People who had the bump lading of fuglis to a considerable amount, and could largely take advantage of the med of borrowers. Those who furnished the money remained in the background. He solemnly engaged to loan at fabulous rate, at fifty, sixty and even eighty per each. Each month, the capitalists met at his house the presented his accounts and divided the profits. And he so arranged matters as to keep the largest harve for himself, to root the robbers.
