

"Shorter" Pastry and "Shorter" Bills.

We are talking about a "shorter" which will not cause indignation. Those who "know a thing or two" about Cooking (Marion Harland among a host of others) are using instead of lard. None but the purest, healthiest and cleanest ingredients go to make up Cottolene. Lard isn't healthy, and is not always clean. Those who use Cottolene will be healthier and wealthier than those who use lard. Healthier because they will get "shorter" bread; wealthier because they will get "shorter" grocery bills—for Cottolene costs no more than lard and goes twice as far as lard half as expensive.

The Irish Question.

In another column will be found a report of Mr. Anglin's highly interesting lecture upon the progress and present position of the Home Rule cause as well as his opinion of Mr. Gladstone's measure at present before the British Parliament to bring about that most desirable result. No question has stood so prominent and so long in the politics of Great Britain as this Irish question. It has made and unmade prime ministers, and if the present bill does not pass, it will continue to be a disturbing element in British politics until the Irish people once more secure the same measure of self-government they possessed during the existence of what is popularly known as Grattan's Parliament.

From the days of the Anglo-Norman conquest in 1169 until the right of self-government for the Irish people took form, Ireland was a Kingdom subordinate to that of Great Britain, subject to the English Privy Council having the right to decide what measure should be passed by the Irish Parliament. This boon was obtained in 1782 when Henry Grattan, in Parliament, moved his famous Declaration of Rights in which he enunciated the doctrine "that no body of men is competent to legislate for Ireland save the King, Lords and Commons thereof." At that time such words were a bold declaration for an Irish leader to make, but behind him, the support of the population was 100,000 organized volunteers trained to the use of arms and ready to use them, if needs be, in support of the rights of their country.

After this came the first French Revolution and that country's career of unscrupulous appropriations under the First Napoleon upon the European Continent. England, with a view to counterbalance them, by intrigue and bribery in 1800, succeeded in inducing a majority of the Irish Parliament to vote for the surrender of their country's power to self-government. During the celebrated debate which resulted in the parliament of Grattan raising the hand of the suicide against itself, the celebrated William Conyngham Plunket, in addressing the body said "if you pass the act it will be a nullity, and no man in Ireland will be bound to obey you." Notwithstanding this appeal, the measure passed and from that time to the present, Ireland has been disaffected and rebellious, and every act of the British Parliament to drag her people into acquiescence in this act of union has not only been vain but made the great mass of her people more determined to secure the rights of self-government. It is true that during the present century great and wonderful changes for the better have taken place in the condition of the Irish people. Catholic emancipation and other measures came which recognized the political existence of that long proscribed portion of the Irish race. Then concession after concession was extended to them, the franchise was granted and within sixty years changes have taken place in the social and political condition of the mass of the Irish people such as the most sanguine never dreamed or expected in the beginning of the century.

The elements that equip a downtrodden people who are fit for liberty—like the child—grow slowly and imperceptibly to manhood. The last sixty years have witnessed the emancipated Irish race, through the diffusion of education and the various political concessions which England has made them, slowly rise from the position of the political outcasts of sixty years ago to that of being masters of the field of Irish politics today. The passions and prejudices which, in the eighteenth century, largely controlled the Irish people are now fortunately things of the past. Denominational differences which in past times were considered of such vital importance by the members of the different religious sects find no recognition among the great mass of the Irish people today. In this fact we see the highest evidence that the Irish people are ready for home rule. When a people heretofore so bitterly divided as the Irish were on the matter of religion can overcome their religious prejudices and forget their differences and unite for a common cause, they have shown their capacity to rule in their own affairs. If Mr. Gladstone's present bill granting home rule to Ireland passed by the Imperial Parliament we have not the least doubt that it will be the first step towards Great Britain adopting the federal system which Mathew Arnold recognizes as the next step in the evolution of forms of government. Already an agitation for home rule has sprung up both in Scotland and Wales and when Ireland succeeds in obtaining local self-government it will not be long before Scotland and Wales will be claiming and receiving the same boon.

If Great Britain were to adopt the Federal principle of government and give local self-government or home rule to England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland with representation of all in the British Parliament, instead of being broken up and weakened, she would be more united and stronger than ever she was before. It was this fear of dismembering the Kingdom which, during question, has so long defeated Irish home rule in the Imperial Parliament, and arrayed in opposition to it such papers as the London Times, Standard, Daily Telegraph and Pall Mall Gazette, which are supposed to reflect British sentiment. It is the taking of this view of the question wherein lies the danger to the peace of the Empire, but against a Federal system this cry would have no foundation. It is possessed by both the United States and Canada and in both countries it is found to work well, and there is not the least doubt if it were adopted by Great Britain it would be found to give equal satisfaction to the British people. Under the Federal system, the Imperial Parliament would have all its time to devote to national affairs, and the legislatures of the four kingdoms would be able to give the local affairs of the country that attention they do not at present receive from the Imperial Parliament owing to its time being almost completely occupied in the discussion of national questions that are of vital importance to the nation.

Prorogation of the Legislature.

The local legislature of this Province, after a session of 37 days, was prorogued on Saturday last, and by this time the great majority of its members have returned home to the bosom of their constituents, who, we have not the least doubt, will be pleased to have them once more among them. From all accounts, the new Speaker, Mr. Burleigh, owing to his ability and impartial manner in which he performed the duties of his office, has given general satisfaction to the supporters of the government as well as the opposition. Both parties are of the opinion that after he has had a little more experience in the Speaker's chair, he will make one of the best and ablest Speakers that the House has had since Confederation.

In numbers as well as in debating talent the opposition has made a poor show during the present session, and judging from the present appearance of affairs, we have every reason to expect that the present government will remain in power during the life of the present house. Mr. Burns has just returned from Europe and on being interviewed said that he believes that the government made a great mistake in not ratifying the French treaty. These latter contracts had to be cancelled. Burns says that the treaty gives the French traders, Bellevue has ratified the treaty, and the determination this certified shall be final to all intents and purposes.

government are to be continued it would not be long before every business and industry in the province would be taxed. Last year $500 was paid for mining purposes. Was the money spent in developing that industry? The accounts showed that that sum was paid Mr. R. A. Lawlor, and that in addition $2000 was paid Mr. R. R. Call, for a report made by him in connection with some mine in Northumberland county.

Hon. Mr. Blair said that the leader of the opposition had made a speech which was merely a rebash of the statement and allegations he had made a hundred times before. He had offered no new material that justified him in occupying the attention of the house, and preventing the despatch of important public business. His statement, for instance, that the balance against the province, at the end of the year was $54,000, was given in the
