A BIT OF VERSE

THE POET'S SONG.

Mr. Fielding in his opening campaign speech in Hailitax, made the statement, that if in 1914 Sir Robert Borden had proposed to Sir Wilfrid Borden had proposed to Sir Wilfrid That caroled a vesper tune. She sang the airiest fancies That teemed in an idle brain—But her songs, like the dove of the deluge. Returned to their ark again.

Then meekly she went to the master.

The of the kind, grave eyes—By years of reading and study,

The public are demanding from the collitical leaders a straightforward and ting of the important problems before the country at this time. And is well that it is so. They are in mood for evasions such as are stually served up. They deel nothing it impatience at the attempt of Mr. King, as in his speech in the imperial Treatre in this city, to gloss over the clossal railroad biunders of his party etween 1903 and 1911. It is perhaps the the encouragement and aid itended to the Canadian Northern besquent to the latter date only ved to intensify the previous bluning, adding blunder to blumder; but The Financial Post, dealing with Maturally, the sight of all those war multions would throw a terrible party to seek to whitewash the closs railroad crime of the Naturally, the sight of all those war munitions would throw a terrible party to seek to whitewash the closs railroad crime of the Naturally, the sight of all those war munitions would throw a terrible care into Mackenzie King, who is by emparament as well as principle a man of peace.

Mr. Mackenzie King's stumping tour remains one of the old lines:

I love to watch the rooster crow, He's tike so many men I know, Nor ever a strain and shout And beat their manily cheets, without The least damn thing to brag about.

Naturally, the sight of all those war munitions would throw a terrible care into Mackenzie King, who is by errod.

Great Men.

Great Men.

For our heroes we go to the past, rarely to the present. Our politicians, our actors, and our priests fail by comparison with our statesmen, our players and our preachers of the past.

Mankind has always deplored the age in which it lives. Why is this Stand at the foot of a mountain range and your view will be blurred. It is only when you retire a distance that the peaks stand out in all their majesty. When the future has retired from the present and can contemplate it from a distance, mag it be even so in regard to our own great men?

Building or Breadlines?

An editorial in a recent issue of Municipal and County Engineering has for its heading the pointed wording "Building or Breadlines?" The contention is that instead of undue optimism at present the fact should be forced that there are about six million unemployed men in the United States. Urging that work is what will relieve the situation, the paper goes on to point out: "While it is unpleasant to direct thought to what will surely happen if we go on walting for providential, or congressional, relief, it is pleasant indeed to point out that if public works projects be driven forward now, useful work will be provided for those released from industry, and great sums of money will be placed in general circulation, to the immediate and substantial benefit of all lines of business."—London Advertiser. If so the right kind of glasses will assist you to obtain comfort.

We are supplying a Crookeslens for sensitive eyes that is giving excellent results. These lenses are slightly tinted but scarcely perceptible on the face. They differ from the ordinary colored lens in that they do not alter the color of objects seen, but absorb the light rays that are most injurious to the eyes.

The Crookes lens is the product of many months' study and experiment by one of England's greatest Scientists "Sir Wm. Crookes."
