We know which to expect had a worse condition that now. We know which to expect had be opportunity to turn over their is omebody else. They would have the only alternative policy and it is. Lord Randolph Churchill is to it ; but now nobody knows at to it; but now nobody knows at so day, Lord Salisbury to-morrow d Ashbourne has his way one week Sim the endition the next. The morth side of King Strees, between Jong to it; but now nobody knows at so day, Lord Salisbury to-morrow d Ashbourne has his way one week Sim the line is in the greesent is met a handord whom it the individual to the present is not and oph Churchill is the committee on Works, you will thus seet, the the his is a streage to the line times in the is is to hay a streage to the streage to the streage to the intermeter the streage to the streage to the streage the work is in the city. The beam keeping well alterned to that settimes in the is nothing to what is going to be the is nothing to what is going to be the is nothing to what is going to be the immediate future. On the shores of ord Ashbo ord Ashbourne has his way one week, Sir fichael Hicks-Beach the next. 'The result Michael Hicks-Beach the next. The result of this indecision,' says the landlord whom I quote, 'is a policy of imbecility.' He insists that Dublin Castle could easily have check-mated Mr. Dillon's plan of campaign at the start, or could do so even now if it would act with decision. Wherever the Government gives the landlord knows whether he can rely on their help or not. They give it here and refuse it there in circumstances practically identical. The tenanta, he declares, have shown great reluctance to adopt the plan of Mr. Dillon and Mr. O'Brien and other leaders are really discouraged; but the Government strengthen their hands and tolerate them, and allow Mr., Dillon to treat courts and Castle with open contempt. The prosecution is a
