'Somewhere in France.'

Somewhere in France the fevered day is ending. Belated wild birds in their homeward flight circle and stir the white, with sweet insistence. They voice their soft complaining to the night.

Somewhere in France the warm green of her meadows. Gleams red and dark beneath the brooding stars. But hark to her as blossoms time and harvest. Whose fields are sown and garnered by red Mars?

Somewhere in France the sodden trenches cover Dreams of warm vineyards basking in the sun of little children calling through the twilight. Of love, and peace and home when day is done.

Somewhere in France the silent night is nearing. Ringing no drums to those who would forget. But great and strong to find who know no rest.

For whom the sun shall no more rise and set.

Rural School Fairs.

Rural school fairs are no longer regarded as novelties; they now form a regular part of the work of the district representatives, says Gordon Farrow in the Toronto Globe. A few years ago when these fairs were in the experimental stage many of the farmers, the school trustees, and even the agricultural representatives thought that the idea was a little premature. How could mere school children hope to successfully conduct a fair when the majority of the regular ones were barely holding their own.

The ordinary country fairs, particularly this year, are losing some of their popularity. The reason for this is not hard to explain. Too many exhibitions are almost entirely devoted to horse racing. This form of sport while appealing to many, does not suit the farming community as a whole. Again, many fairs give too much encouragement to the professional prize winners—that is men or women who make collections of different prize-winning fowl, fruit, live stock, or even quilts, or who take a certain racehorse and enter it at all the different fairs in the neighborhood, the result being that the bulk of the prize money of that particular section goes to only a few men. Too many fairs encourage fancy, instead of utility breeding.

Most of the farming in Ontario is mixed. The people are interested in cows that are kept for their milking or beef qualities or both, in poultry that lay eggs or make good roasters, and in horses that work. The same, on the other hand, seem to have as many classes of exhibits as possible. Though only two or three breeds of cattle may be kept in the community, you will find classes for at least half a dozen. Poultry exhibits show a surprising variety. Fancy fowl carry off more prizes than these strictly bred for utility purposes. It is not strange, then, to find fairs going back and the rural school fairs coming to the front.

Rural school fairs were established to encourage better agriculture among the children in the country schools, to teach the pupils the advantages and disadvantages of different grain and clover seeds, to show the results of better breeding of live stock and the best methods of cultivation of the soil. Have they done it? A trip to any of the school fairs would convince the most skeptical that they have. The method by which children of ten and twelve years have been taught what men of twenty are learning at agricultural colleges is very interesting.

In the spring the District Representative visits the country schools. He gives them a general agricultural talk. Children are asked what experiments they wish to carry out. Some choose a few pounds of grain, some flower seeds, and others decide to take a dozen "red lay" Barred Rock eggs. A few enterprising young farmers will train a collie or collie for the fair. This year pupils have also taken up the "war-pipe" idea. For this the pupil marks off a piece of ground one rod by two rods, and plants it in potatoes. The crop is either given direct to the Patriotic Fund, or the proceeds from the sale of it are handed over. The children do all the planting, cultivating and harvesting of their plots.

Accurate reports are kept of all the work. Are the children interested? Just watch them working in their plots and you will get your answer. According to the District Representative, parents of the children state that they cannot keep the boys and girls away from their experiments.

A few days ago the writer was an interested visitor at the second annual Cannington Rural School Fair, held under the direction of District Representative R. M. Tipper and A. W. Street. The fair was held in a little park on the outskirts of the village. About 10 o'clock children and parents began to arrive. From then till 5 in the afternoon the clerk was kept busy handing the entries. The attendance by that time had reached five hundred.

The tables in the tent were soon covered with a great variety of exhibits. Nearly a hundred plates of splendid apples tempted you as you entered. In spite of the lateness of the season there was a remarkably good display of flowers. Old fashioned sewing by the girls was placed opposite their brothers' handiwork with the jack-knife. A strict watch was kept over the table of home cooking. Next to the wall on each side was a school exhibit consisting of many varieties of fruits, flowers and vegetables, arranged very attractively. An excellent display of carrots, mangels and greens was also on hand.

Outside a row of chickens cooped house-rooms very fine birds. There was an fancy fowl here. Big, healthy poultry which would be a credit to any farmer were the attractions. One lad especially engaged in showing how his Angus calf could be milked.

Perhaps the facts that impressed the stranger most were the business like way in which the children handled their exhibits and the intense interest they displayed over the results of the judging. The effect these fairs will have on these future agriculturists cannot be estimated. The stimulus alone, outside the lasting effect they will have, makes the trouble and expenses of conducting these gatherings well worth while.

Meaning of Half-Mast.

You have noticed that whenever a prominent person dies, the flags on public buildings are hoisted only half-way up. This is called "half-mast." Did you ever stop to think what connection there could be between a flag that was not properly hoisted and the death of a great man? Ever since flags were used in war it has been the custom to have the flag of the superior conquering nation above that of the inferior or vanquished. When a strong land itself hopelessly beaten it hauled its flag down far enough for the flag of the victors to be placed above it on the pole. This was a token not only of submission, but of respect. In those days, when a famous soldier died, flags were lowered out of respect to his memory. The custom long ago passed from purely military usage to public life of all kinds, the flag flying at half-mast being a sign that the dead man was worthy of universal respect. The space left above it is for the flag of the great conqueror of all—the angel of death.

Bad Cold in the Chest.

"I am happy to tell you that I used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Limesed and Turpentine and was promptly cured of a very bad cold in the chest," writes Miss Josephine Gauthier, Dover, N. B., Ont. You can depend on Dr. Chase's Syrup of Limesed and Turpentine to relieve and cure all inflammation and irritation of the throat and bronchial tubes.

Harmless Gossip.

"With every death a reputation dies," does ad poetic license to truth, but unfortunately it has a superstructure of fact. Scandal most decent people shun, but everyone seems to have a secret hankering for 's harmless gossip."

When a group of individuals gather together all talk about people or things, and ideas is exactly in accord, along with their mental activity. Petty minds can't think beyond the affairs of the neighborhood. Little souls must look at life personally and deal in concrete conceptions in which Mr. A. and Mrs. B. and Mrs. C. figure.

Broader minded men and women are interested in events, in happenings of life about them in the larger world news. And really superior minds concern themselves with speculation, with mental experiment, with the sort of thing that has made for growth and progress and discovery. I wonder why so few of us remember that the way we interpret other people's actions has to be based on self-knowledge. If we know each in our own soul that a seemingly innocent thing would mean ignoble purpose in our own case, naturally we must conclude that it means the same in another case.

Each of us takes ourself as the standard of measurement. Each of us interprets other people's actions in terms of what we would mean if it were the same thing. Each of us must look at life through his own eyes. A little thought and every one of us will grant the truth of this statement.

Then there is the thought that ought to make us all tremble at the thought of gossip. If we sincerely and suggestively comment on the se-

German System of Espionage.

"Je la deteste, cette vie, mais je dois la suivre." Those words, spoken by a German cavalry officer, reveal the sentiment that surrounds the greatest system of espionage that the world has ever known.

Hunger in Berlin.

Calm and confident as is the tone of the German press, yet they do not disguise the fact that the pinch of hunger is being felt, and that many in Berlin are suffering from lack of food. Whether this is due to a shortage of supplies or to economic conditions placing many necessities of the table out of reach of the poor, it is impossible to say. But the hungry exist in Berlin, and the fugitives Rudolph points the following pathetic picture of the sufferings of the poorest.

"Can nothing be done to end the pitiful spectacle of which the Berlin military depots and barracks are constantly the scene? Toward noon, day after day, a motley crowd assembles at the door of these buildings. It is composed of shamed men, women and children armed with the most grotesque receptacles.

"They take their stand there and wait patiently for an hour and a half, sometimes in a pelting rain, until the cookhouse sweeper appears carrying a huge tin saucepan containing an impossible medley, the leavings of the soldiers' dinner, pieces of fat meat and bone, bread, potatoes, and table scraps of all kinds.

At his appearance a momentary sparkle of anticipation lights up the faded eyes and gives new energy to the poor, old bodies as they hobble forward to present their pots and pans.

The younger and more robust among the waiting crowd, however, soon elbow and push their aside, with the result that the older ones go, as they come, with their hands as empty as their stomachs. Then they try again the next day until they collapse."

The supply of meat and fat seems to have run short, and we are told that the amount sold is strictly limited and can be obtained only from certain public markets. On this subject the Berlin socialist daily, Vorwaerts, writes:

"It is no exaggeration to say that in Berlin thousands of persons are suffering from lack of food."

Three times were the British completely surrounded by the Germans, in the retreat from Mons, but on one occasion was the situation more critical than others. It was then that the French failed to come up to the support of General French. The 'contemptible little army' earned its way through the enemy's lines as it had done before, thanks to a tremendous

So against gossip there are three great arguments: in talking about people we acknowledge ourselves too stupid to conceive of life impersonally in terms of things and ideas, we do irreparable harm to innocent people and by malicious interpretation of simple acts we confuse ourselves practically incapable of acting with simple decency.—Beatrice Fairfax.

Worn Worried Women.

HER MANY DUTIES AFFECT HER HEALTH AND OFTEN HER BREAKS DOWN COMPLETELY. It is little wonder that there are many times in a woman's life when she feels in despair. There is no nine hour day for the busy housewife. There are a hundred things about the home to keep her busy from the time she awakes until it is again bed time. What is the result? Often her nerves give way, her good looks suffer, her blood becomes thin, her digestion is disturbed and her system threatened with a complete breakdown. Every woman should do all possible to protect her health and good looks. — There is one way in which she can do this and that is by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These actually make new, rich blood, strengthen every nerve and every organ, bring the glow of health to the cheeks and brightness to the eyes. These pills have done more to make the lives of thousands of women sunshiny than anything else in the world. Mrs. Daniel Thiel, Wajetloo, Ont., says: "I was very much run down, my blood was thin and watery and I would faint at the least excitement. I suffered from headaches and dizziness, and often it seemed as though there were clouds before my eyes. Finally I was forced to go to bed with weakness. I doctored for six weeks while in bed without receiving any benefit. Finally I was induced to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and when I had taken ten boxes I was completely cured, and never felt better in my life. I am convinced that what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills did for me they will do for others, and I warmly recommend them to all weak women."

The Brave Man.

I like the man who faces what he must with step triumphant and a heart of cheer; Who fights the daily battle without fear, Whose his hopes fall, yet keeps unfaltering true; That God is God; that somehow, true and just, His plans work out for mortals.

—Sarah K. Bailton.

NOT ENOUGH CHILDREN

ever receive the proper balance of food to sufficiently nourish both body and brain during the growing period when nature's demands are greater than in mature life. This is shown in so many pale faces, lean bodies, frequent colds, and lack of ambition.

For all such children we say with unmistakable earnestness! They need Scott's Emulsion and need it now. It possesses in concentrated form the very food elements to enrich their blood. It changes weakness to strength! It makes them sturdy and strong and active.
