

The Address to Messrs. McCaig and McMillan.

The following is the address presented to Messrs. McCaig and McMillan, of Rockwood Academy, along with the two handsomely silver mounted walking canes, of which we gave the particulars last week:

To Messrs. McCaig and McMillan, Principals, Rockwood Academy.

ESTEEMED TEACHERS.—It is with emotions of profound regret that we meet on the present occasion, knowing as we do that we meet but to part, and wemay never all meet in this world, which makes our separation the more solemn and impressive. We feel that we are parting with teachers who have laboured faithfully, zealously and successfully for our mental, moral and spiritual welfare; and we feel ourselves under a moral obligation to express our sincere regard and esteem for you as teachers, and to give our testimony in favour of an institution in which we have found all the advantages of institutions of greater pretensions, all the comforts of home, all the sociality of the family circle, and all the regularity and sacredness of the family altar. And although our relation as teachers and students is now about to terminate, we assure you that the tie of gratitude and affection which binds the faithful teacher and his students heart to heart can never be severed, nor his influence cease to be felt. The kind advice, the mild rebuke, and the enthusiastic and philanthropic earnestness of the teacher will continually recur to the memory through all life's changing scenes, and will live and bloom in continued memories, undecayed by age, unobliterated by change, unweakened by time, and undestroyed by distance, and will vanish only amid the ebbing memories and dim mists of expiring nature when the phantom visions of a fleeting world recede from view. It is a pleasing thought and one on which we love to ponder, that as we pass and re-pass on the many and often rugged paths of life, we may always be able to grasp each other's hand in true friendship, and recognize in each other's countenances the sparkling eye of gratitude which greets only the friend and the benefactor, while each may be able to say with honest pride, he was my teacher, and he my student. Asking then your acceptance of these canes as souvenirs of our appreciation, and sincerely hoping that it may be long, long ere declining nature requires you to lean upon them, we humbly pray that health, happiness and prosperity may ever attend you.

CHAS. McLELLAN, M. M. CAMPBELL, On behalf of the Students.

A Private Butchery in New Orleans.

"New Orleans," says one of its editors, "has been famous for its fierce personal encounters. A host of men, whose names adorn sometimes the annals of the country, sometimes the tombstones of the city, and among whom would probably be included those of Bowie, McClung and Crockett, have here made some of their deadly rendezvous, and tested the correctness of their pistol practice." This reputation is likely to cling to the city still, for the respectable practice continues. The last duel reported occurred last Sunday morning at the famous dueling ground on the Metairie Ridge known as "The Oaks." This encounter has few parallels in ferocity, even among German and French dueling records. The antagonists were a native Creole of New Orleans and a Frenchman, the provocation was a blow in the face by the Creole, the weapons were broad-swords; the hour daybreak. The combatants stripped to the waist, and sword in hand, in the freezing air of the morning, sprung at each other like tigers. A few lunges and cuts were parried, when an uncut from the Frenchman's sword wounded his opponent in the right arm. The answer from the Creole laid open the Frenchman's left cheek, exposing his teeth. The wounded man stepped back, had a handkerchief bound around his face, and again put himself in attitude. His first lunge grazed the breast of his antagonist, and passed through the off arm. An attempt was made by the seconds to stop the matter at this point, but the man with the handkerchief around his jaws rushed at the second who was most anxious to settle the matter, sword in hand, swearing that nothing but a death should end the affair. The battle was renewed, and lasted until the Creole had received eight wounds and the other six—all severe and painful, but none very dangerous.

SABBATH SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY.—The Wesleyan Methodist Sabbath School Anniversary will take place this evening. They always get up a good entertainment, and those who think of attending may be certain of enjoyment. The Queen has fifteen grandchildren alive.
