OR—
The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER VII.

KENNETH MAINTAINS HIS RIGHT—THE MYSTERIOUS VISITOR AT THE LUNATIC.

Time wore on, and at the end of three or four months they found there was likelihood of being deprived of George. All their inquiries proved futile to discover his relations or throw light on his parentage. The owners of the Eglantine could find no trace of a lady and a child having sailed as passengers in the vessel. George Morrar was the only name entered in the books, and those who were connected with the loading and departure of the vessel were not cognizant of any others having gone on board before she quitted Kingston harbor. Neither did it appear that the captain or any other of the ship's officer had a wife and child with them in the ship. In fact the matter was shrouded in utter mystery, and there was no prospect that time would make the mystery plainer, for the only one who could give information in the matter was still a mindless maniac. Kenneth and Lucy were glad of this—truly and sincerely glad. Day by day George had twined himself closer and closer round their hearts, till they loved him with a love which parting would have turned into the keenest grief. Lucy even dreaded the hour when the result of the inquiries made in Jamaica would reach them, lest the result might be that the child was to be taken away by his father's or his mother's relatives; and when the letter came which told how vain these inquiries had been, she caught George to her bosom in a transport of joy, and looking up to Kenneth with a flushed and happy face, she exclaimed that he was their own now, and from that hour he should be called George MORRAR BRUCE.

Kenneth smiled his cordial assent, for he too was glad that it had turned out so. Thus the little orphan of the wreck was brought into the shelter and sanctity of a happy home, where he should never know the loss he had sustained, and could love and be loved with all the intensity of true and holy affection.

It was a beautiful sight to see the relations established between the two children—George and Carry. How fond they were of each other—how they would play together for hours in perfect happiness and content—how George would sit with his little arm round Carry, lest she should fall, and exercise a thoughtfulness most wonderful in one so young, to keep his little playmate from harm, and supplying all her childish wants—refusing even to quarrel with her when the imperious little lady went into the capricious moods of infancy, and grew unreasonable in her exactions. Many a happy hour did Kenneth and Lucy enjoy in watching the children at play, and it was with no ordinary emotion that they beheld the strong affection which was growing between them.

And so we leave Mossgrove and its inmates for a season—the course of our story being destined to lead us among other people. We leave them, however, in circumstances of quiet felicity—a bright sunshine filling their dwelling and penetrating their hearts with a satisfying happiness. We may just add, ere bidding them adieu for a season, that Kenneth's great picture had made him famous. No sooner had it begun to be exhibited in Edinburgh than it drew marked attention—yes, it produced a sensation, and was praised and admired to a high degree. Several wealthy men desired to purchase it, and large sums were offered for it, but Kenneth would not dispose of it at any price. The event which it at once commemorated and portrayed made it a sacred possession of the household—too sacred and tender in its associations to be given up to strangers. So at the end of the season it was brought home to Mossgrove, and hung on the wall of their sitting room, and Kenneth and Lucy never gazed at it without being reminded of that awful night of storm and devastation.

BREAKFAST—EPPE'S COCOA—GRAVELL and COMPANY.—By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Eppe has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save up many heavy doctors' bills.—Civil Service Gazette. Made simply with boiling water or milk. Each packet is labeled "James Eppe & Co., Homeopathic Chemists, London." Also, makers of Eppe's Milky Cocoa (Cocoa and Condensed Milk).

The cathartics used and approved by the physicians comprising the various medical associations of this State are now compounded and sold under the name of Parson's Purgative Pills.
