To Improve the Port. The ADVERTISER'S Ottawa correspondent telegraphs: "A deputation consisting of Mayor Essery, London; ex-Mayor McCully, St. Thomas; Dr. King, Kingsville, vicepresident of the Port Stanley Railway, and Capt. Ellison, Port Stanley, are here to ask the Government to devote the sum of $15,000 for the improvement of Port Stanley harbor, including the reconstruction of piers by which vessels could be run in connection with the railway, coal and other freight. The deputation waited on Mr. Onimet this afternoon, and state that they expect the work to be resumed almost immediately. If so there will be no necessity for a revote, as the former vote is through eight inches of snow. To-night it available until July 1. The cost of rebuilding the piers is estimated at $12,000 or $13,000. Mr. Onimet told the deputation in regard to Port Stanley that all the money at present voted would probably be required to repair the present piers, but he would place their views before his colleagues.

Lilliputians at the Grand. There was entertainment of a unique kind at the Grand last night, when the lilliputians held the boards. When little Annie Nelson tripped out, as the curtain rose, there was a loud burst of applause, but when her broad-shouldered, six-foot German lover appeared on the scene and started to woo the midget the Indicrous situation evoked a roar of laughter. Then Mozart, the tall, litted the little fraulein into a chair and assisted her into her jacket, after which they marched around the stage playing soldier. Their part is a laughable little comedy sketch entitled "A German Visit." In it the little woman sang with a sweet and strong voice and danced very gracefully and prettily. Mr. John Johnston Champions It at Labor Hall-Land at the Reot of All Things-Mr. Ashplant

Combats It. Pursuant to challenge, the "single tax" theory was publicly debated in Labor Hall last night by Messre. H. B. Ashplant and J. Johnston beforea most attentive audience. Mr. Johnston championed the single tax and Mr. Ashplant combatted it. Both gentlemen showed great breadth and depth of information, quoting the works of political economists with a familiarity that indicated extensive reading and research on the subject. The debate was not brought avenue east, have left for St. Catherines to to a focus; another night will be necessary for that. However, a foundation was securely said upon which they can readily build. Each debater spoke for ten minutes alternately, Mr. Johnston, who spoke very fluently, was outspoken in his support of a tax on land values only. He emphasized very strongly the fact that land was at the root of all production or The products of land were the only things absolutely necessary to human life except air. A man who could succeed in getting into his own hands all the land or the products of land could make slaves of every person on earth. The land was the property of the whole people, and if a man took any part of land values he was taking part sympathy extended to her during her late of the value of the people. The speaker pointed out that it was impossible to divide the land, share and share alike, because a fresh distribution would be required every time an infant was born. The single tax was the alternative. Every tax laid on the products of land independent of land must be a double or treble one. Take iron. It first suffered a tax as a land product. Then it was taxed as pig iron and then as ma-chinery. Take the instance of a young man boarding. The farmer who raised the necessaries of life was first taxed on his land. He puts that tax on the food that he sold to the boarding-house keeper. The latter collected it from the young man, who, therefore, paid three taxes. Was that just? Upon what did the manufacturing aborer exercise his labor? Upon land products only. It might be timber, iron, bones or anything else. Therefore the monopolist of land products could make the States and off the Middle Atlantic coast. trustees. After the initiation of a large laborer submit to his terms because the number of candidates the members and laborer must have land products to live. Though the capitalists could not turn a hand's stroke at his own business yet he could compel the skilled mechanic to work for him because the capitalist had the material or land products and the workman had not. A lot on the corner of Dundas and Richmond streets was worth far more than one on Regent street. What caused the increased value of the former? others. All present were well pleased and It was because the people clustered about it: it was the center of distribution. -Mr. John Mitchell, who has If the whole people created that been janitor of the Oddfellows' Hall value, that uncarned increment, should since its completion nearly twenty they not share that value? Mr. years ago, and who held the same Johnston showed that by placing the position in the hall previously used by the tax on land the man who held a vacant lot order, has resigned. Bro. Mitchell intends for speculation would be compelled to sell it or apply labor on it by building, because ably no Oddfellow in this city is better he would have to pay as much taxes on it known or more popular than Bro. Mitchell. as his neighbor next door with a $10,000 > assessment on income-no evading the law. The land was there and its value fixed. Mr. Ashplant agreed with most of Mr. Johnston's premises, but combatted his conclusions. There was not the slightest evidence that the present poverty and starvation were due to monopoly of the land. The landed aristocracy of England been recording secretary of Dominion were not of the wealthiest class. The acute poverty was not on the farm or in cities. The unearned increment of labor had been sponged up by the commercial employers—the manufacturing monopolists. The capitalist got his money from the labor of his men and not from land. A man might work for twenty years in a local factory and his employer grow rich on the profits of his labor, and when the workman was old and infirm he was turned out with no share of those profits. The trouble was that consumption could not keep pace with production. He could not see that Henry George had disclosed the relationship between the land and the social problem of

There was some very good Japanese juggling, and a trick artist amused the audience greatly. The performance concluded with a capital illusionary act called the "Enchanted Statue," in which Count Magri proved himself a lightning change artist as well as a clever actor.
