"Who would believe you?" sneered Arthur. "You would be the one to be arrested; you disappeared, and the money vanished at the same time. Not a shadow of suspicion has rested upon me. I have lived my usual life, going and coming according to my custom, and no one has the slightest knowledge of the events of that night; while you could produce no evidence to prove your assertions, and you can imagine how they would be received."

Yesterday, at that time, this reasoning would have appeared incontestable to Louis, but now he exulted that through the zeal and tireless exertions of his loved one, the game was all in his own hands. However, he must adopt some bold measure immediately, for Arthur had evidently arranged his own course of proceeding, and was upon the point of

"I reject it utterly," returned Louis. The young man before him uttered an oath. He had planned to France that night, as Louis had sur-mised, to carry his spoils to a place of greater safety, and where he could avail himself of them to better ad-

He stooped and began to unpack his basket that he had brought. He took out several packages and thrust them impatiently between the fron bars, and Louis, taking them one by one, carried them to his table, and appeared to exercise considerable care in arranging them there. All but the last one had been then disposed of.

Arthur was still in a stooping posture waiting for his prisoner to come and take this; he was busily thinking, and did not look up until Louis came close up to that iron grating; then he raised his head, and found himself looking directly into the barrel of a

"How on earth— Who has been here? Nobody could get in—I can't understand!" Arthur gasped.
"No you connot understand." and I 'No, you cannot understand, and I do not intend to enlighten you. It is in my hand a Colt's revolver, with carcerated, and dropped weakly into which I intend to do good service for a chair. That means, I suppose, that you in-

"I will spare you upon one condition," Louis answered, still covering his captor with that formidable weapon. 'What is that?" questioned Arthur, to gain time, but knowing well enough "That you release me from this place instantly.

you that I have here the means of releasing myself, in the form of a steel file and saw, made expressly for cuteither my strength or my time to effect my own release in that way." don't believe it," said Arthur increduously.

With his eye still fixed on the man now in his power, and the revolver pointing directly at his head, Louis unbuttoned his coat, and with his left hand drew forth the implements of which he had spoken. Arthur's face grew almost wild in its expression of fear and astonishment. "Heavens! who has done this? Who has been here? The doors were safely locked when I came. It is all a mystery to me," he said, in a savage tone. "Unlock the gate of this place and let me out," commanded Louis.

Arthur hesitated, even though he felt he was absolutely helpless, while he inwardly cursed himself for coming to the place unarmed; but, then, who would ever have dreamed of anything like this occurring?
"Come," reiterated Louis, in an imperative tone, "you may be very sure that I mean business; as you have already remarked, 'I have too much at just now to be very tendertearted towards you."

One look into his stern face and blazing eye convinced Arthur of that. And yet, in spite of all, he hated to give in, and stood irresolute. It was

"Unlock that gate!" thundered Louis. "Will you permit me to go unmolest-ed if I let you out?" Arthur parleyed, and glancing helplessly toward door.

"I promise nothing," Louis returned, relentlessly. "I shall count five; if the gate is not unlocked at the last num-

"One-two-three---' Slowly and awfully those threatening sounds fell upon Arthur's ears.
"Hold!" he cried. "If I will tell you where that money is-if I throw up everything and swear to leave the country and never cross your path again, will you let me go?"

He was actually shivering, and his face twitching from nervous excitement, and nearly crushed with humiliation at thus being obliged to reverse the conditions that he had tried to make with Louis only a few minutes before.

'Four-fi-"Stop, stop-for heaven's sake! I'll unlock it!" he almost shrieked, as, looking into Louis' blazing eyes, he saw there was not so much as the snadow of relenting in them. "Put down that revolver," he continued, in a shaking voice. "I can do the significant response. Arthur groaned aloud, too plainly for his own comfort; he saw that he had no weak character to deal with, and with trembling hands and a face that was ghastly in its whiteness, he drew from one of the pockets of his coat a key of brass, which he proceeded to insert in the ponderous padlock which fastened Louis' prison, and turned it in the lock.

The sound was like the sweetest music to Louis' ear. "Remove the lock and open gate," he commanded.

Obediently the foe did as he was told, and Louis walked forth a free man once more. "Now, I will take all the keys belonging to this place, if you please," he said, holding out his left hand for "I will let you out when I Arthur said, trying to speak calmly, but glancing almost wildly about him.

"The keys," repeated Louis, in an inflexible tone. "Now," he continued, as he received the keys, "we will change places for a while, you will go behind those bars and see how you like the life that I have been leading here the last few weeks." "Mercy!" Arthur cried in despair, and clutching frantically at the massive grating before him, "you do not mean it; you cannot be so relentless." "But I do mean it—quick! I shall waste no time upon you." The despairing man saw that there

ARE SPLIT UP

Hamilton Turned Their Right Flank

And Cleared the Way for Buller's Advance-Lydenburg Occupied by the British-One of the Last Stages of London, Sept. 9 .- The following dispatch has been received at the war office from Lord Roberts:

"Belfast, Friday, Sept. 7 .- Jan Hamilton succeeded in turning the Boers' right flank, clearing the way for Buller's advance.

"Dundonald and Brocklehurst occupied Lydenburg Thursday.

"The Boers are split up and going northward and eastward. Most of the guns and stores have been sent to Krugerspost, a small town about 20 miles north by east of Lydenburg. COMMANDANT THERON KILLED.

"Hart, who is operating southwest of Krugersdorp, reports that among the dead Boers left on the field it is believed that the body of Theron has been found."

Commandant Theron, of the Boer army, was known as a great scout. It was he who commanded the Boer patrol that burned early in August near Honigspruit, the train carrying United States Consul Stowe and flying the Stars and Stripes.

Cape Town, Sept. 9 .- Sir Redvers Buller continues his advance. He crossed the Mauchberg, ten miles east of Lydenberg, and came into action with the Boers. The occupation of Lydenberg, which took place last Thursday, is regarded as marking one of the stages of the war. The Boers now talk of trecking into German territory. Lord Methuen is marching on Lichtenburg from Mafeking. It is said papers received at Pretoria show that the Netherlands Railway Company in many ways actively assisted the Boers. It converted its workshops into arsenals and provided the Transvaal forces with horseshoes.

At Warm Baths.

LORD ROBERTS' REPORT. London, Sept. 9. - The following is the complete dispatch from Lord Roberts to the war office, dated Belfast, Sept. 5:

"General Paget reports that in an engagement near Warm Baths he had one killed, nine wounded, and two taken prisoners, including Surgeon Foy, who was captured while attending a wounded man. The enemy directed his fire chiefly against a kopje, which was ably defended by two chair.

Louis quickly closed the gate upon Munster Fusiliers. The enemy lost held by the Boers since the evacuation five killed, including the field cornet of Pretoria. The Boer forces are still commanding. Paget collected and sent to Pretoria between 4,000 and 5,000 head of cattle.

to Dulstroom yesterday, having encountered slight opposition. He is now moving along the Lydenburg road, and is signaling communication with Buller, whose guns he can hear, and who informs me that he has been engaged during the morning with the enemy's left flank. Hamilton is endeavoring to turn the enemy's left

"Brocklehurst's brigade of cavalry joined Hamilton's column at Barton. He reports that a train proceeding south was fired on last night near Bunk station. A few horses were shot. Previously a patrol of bushmen were fired on near the same place. One was killed and two wounded.

"Two strong columns, one under Clements, and the other under Hart, are now moving about the district near Krugersdorp and Johannesburg. A post held by 125 men of the Canadian Mounted Rifles, guarding the railway between Pan and Wondersfontein, was attacked at daylight this morning by a body of the enemy, under Commandant Treekhart, with two guns and one pom-pom.

"Col. Mahon, who was marching within a few miles of the place at the time, proceeded to the assistance of the little garrison, but they had beaten off the enemy before Mahon and his troops arrived. It was a very creditable performance. Major Saunders, who commanded, and Lieut. Moddle were both slightly wounded. Two privates were wounded and six are missing. The wounded are D. Johnston, of the 2nd Canadian Mounted Infantry; missing, Sergts. Hague and McCullock, and Ptes. Shaig, Glendening, Shaw and Dabonk, all of the Canadian Mounted Infantry.

"The party of the enemy which failed in the attempt to take Winburg hurried towards Ladybrand, which was being held by one company of the Worcester Regiment, and two small troops of the Imperial Yeomanry. The Boers surrounded the position in which the troops were entrenched, and called upon our men to surrender. On the summons being refused their guns opened fire and commenced a heavy bombardment. On the news reaching me I telegraphed the officer commanding on no account to surrender, as Gen. Kelly-Kenny had informed me that, hearing the Boers were making for Ladybrand, he had arranged to send a small column by Lieut. - Col. White to the garrison's assistance. At the same time I ordered Sir Archibald Hunter to send Bruce Hamilton's brigade by rail from Winburg and Kroonstad to Bloemfontein to be ready to assist White's small force, if required. The enemy, foiled in their object, fired 320 rounds into our position, which occupied a front of about half a mile, and kept up a heavy rifle fire at the same time.

was informed yesterday by the resident commissioner of Basutoland that a small Union Jack was still flying over the entrenchments, and this afternoon I received the joyful news that the garrison had been relieved by White, our casualties being only five BADEN-POWELL AT CAPE TOWN. Cape Town, Sept. 10.-The object of General Baden-Powell's visit here is to consult with Governor Sir Alfred Milner regarding the organization of a military police force for the new territories annexed by Great Britain. He will probably visit England before returning to the Transvaal.

BOER TRAIN WRECKERS. Victor Toronto, Sept. 9.—Lieut.-Col. Bigger, cent.

D.A.A.G., who assumed Col. Ryerson's work in South Africa as Red Cross commissioner, had an exciting experience recently while journeying from Cape Town to Pretoria. He was on the train conveying United States Consul Stowe to Pretoria, and which was wrecked by Boers under Commandant Theron.

The colonel says that when within twenty miles of Kroonstad the train was held up by Boers. The time was 1 o'clock in the morning, while all were asleep. The Boer method was to run the engine in on a siding, throw the switch over and upset two cars, thus effectually stopping the train, then fire on every truck containing men. Col. Biggar thinks he may have owed his E. Elgin, Avlmer, Sept. 18-20. Central, Guelph, Sept. 18-20. escape from injury to the fact of his putting out the lamp in his compartment. The Boer commander told them afterwards that his men had used the lights as targets. Several shots passed close to Col. Biggar, but he escaped uninjured. Even after discovering that the car flew the Stars and Stripes, the enemy searched it for firearms, but released the occupants, pushed the car on a siding, and then burned the rest of the train and took all the escort of troops prisoners. After the Boers had left there were after. The railway behind was blown up and the telegraph wire cut, so Col. Biggar started off alone with a red light to a point three miles in their rear to signal the train following, and on his return, having found a hand-car, dispatched his own man and a gergeant to warn the garrison seven miles away. Daylight revealed unfired mines all along the track, and one directly underneath the cars; so, fortunately for the party, the whole intentions of the Boers had not been carried out. A recent cable message stated that Col. Biggar reached Pretoria safely, and later returned to Cape Town. BRITISH PRISONERS RELEASED. Pretoria, Sept. 9.-Nine officers of the Imperial Yeomanry, who were among the British prisoners at Nooit Gedacht, hid in excavations which they had made in their tents, and when the other officers were released and sent on to Barberton, they were nowhere to be found. They subsequently escaped. When the other of-ficers were being liberated, Commandant Viljoen came among them and said: "You are free. I am sending a small escort with you to show you the road to your lines. Keep together. Do not loot farm houses. I know that I am speaking to soldiers of the Queen, and I have confidence in you. I hope that the next time we meet we shall be friends." The prisoners then started lease the six Canadian troopers of the engagement between Pan and Wondersfontein. The Canadian prisoners referred to are: Sergt. Murray, H. Hayne, Farrier-Sergt. McCulloch, and Ptes. Straig, Glendenning, Shaw and Dapbury.

The Situation.

ENEMY DEMORALIZED.

London, Sept. 3.-The occupation of Lydenburg by Buller's army, with the Constipation, Sick Headache, Dizziscattering of Botha's forces east and mountain guns, under command of Capt. Llewellyn, of the British South African police and a company of the African police and a company of the Capt. Llewellyn, of the British South African police and a company of the Capt. Lord Roberts, implies the loss of the gripe or weaken. Only 25c at W. T. in the field, but they have left several justice. guns behind them, and can no longer be said to have a center of regular "General Ian Hamilton got through defensive warfare. The only remaining objective point in Lord Roberts' campaign is Koomatispoort, which can be occupied after the railway line has been cleared eastward from Watervaal and Machadodorp. Otherwise little remains to be done, except the gradual suppression of the raids conducted by small bands of Boer guerillas and the capture of the leaders.

Kruger, Steyn and Reitz are reported to be on the railway line east of Nelspruit, with a train which can run into Portuguese teritory in the course of four or five hours. There is a Boer camp at Barberton, but there are few guns there. The entire Boer force in the Eastern Transvaal probably does not exceed 5,000, and it cannot be readily concentrated. Veterans are at a loss to understand how the Boer campaign can be prolonged beyond the end of this month, unless some unexpected reverse to British arms occurs near Pretoria or Johannesburg.

FALL BUSINESS

Shows a Fair Beginning in the Dominion.

Toronto, Sept. 8 .- Bradstreet's trade review: Business has been fair at Montreal this week. Fall trade is showing more activity. Some failures, with liabilities rather larger than lately experienced, will doubtless tend to make traders observe caution, but there has not been much speculative buying this season, and the prospects for fall trade all seem to have warranted such preparations for it as have been made by country trades.

The large number of visitors in the Toronto market this week continued to stimulate trade. The house sales have been large, buyers from the country having placed many sorting orders for the fall.

Unfavorable weather lately at Winnipeg has tended to check the development of fall trade. Farming operations have been interfered with. Feeling in wheat firm. There is a fair jobbing trade being done. The labor situation has been improved by the settlement of the railway men's strike.

The outlook for trade is fair. A fair amount of fall business is still being done at Hamilton. Large quantities of goods are being distributed by the wholesale firms. Travelers are still sending in good orders. Prices firm. Conditions of business in the city are satisfactory, and the prospects for trade are bright.

The wet weather in British Columbia has retarded harvest operations, and the yield of some grains will in consequence, it is feared, be reduced. The results of the salmon pack on the Fraser River have been very disappointing. The jobbing trade is fair.

At London trade is improving somewhat with the increasing deliveries of grain in the country markets. There is a good demand for fall and winter goods, and quite a good jobbing trade a being well ALLAN LINE- For Liverpool, is being done. Prices are being well
