

IT HAS PROVED A REVELATION

to the palates of thousands of Japan Tea drinkers and may yours

SALADA

Ceylon Natural Green tea is to the Japan Tea drinker what "SALADA" Black is to the Black Tea drinker. Sold only in sealed lead packets, 25c and 40c per lb. By all grocers.

The Rose of Wentworth

"The devil," he muttered, with a great start, as he suddenly realized the awkward position in which he had placed himself.

"Well, I can't help it," he admitted, with averted eyes; "yes, I did."

"Oh, Philip, then it was my money, after all—it was really love me," Arley said, in a despairing voice.

"Are you not assuming considerably?" he asked.

"Will you answer me one question, and answer it honestly?" she questioned, her eyes burning like coals of fire, and two very bright spots concentrated on her cheeks.

"I will endeavor to do so," he replied sarcastically.

"Well, then, if I had been a poor girl at that time, would you have asked me to become your wife?"

"Nonsense, Arley, why will you torture yourself and me with such useless questions?"

"Answer me, you said that you would; if I had then stood in the doubtful position in which I find myself today, would you have asked me to marry you?"

"No, I suppose I should not, if you are determined to be answered," he said recklessly. "I should not have felt justified in so doing, since I was not in circumstances to support a wife."

Poor Arley sank down upon the floor in a heap, a cry of mortal pain escaping her.

Not a word passed between that wretched husband and wife for nearly fifteen minutes, then Arley, who had arisen from her prostrate position and turned to leave the room.

Philip looked at her; his face was still clouded with mortification, disappointment, and anger, yet there was something like a gleam of pity in his eyes for her.

"Arley," he said, when she had nearly reached the door, and with a shamefaced which was anything but comfortable, "where are you going?"

"I am going to my room—and I intend to do the best I can."

"It was such a pathetic, heartbreaking reply, and it cut him keenly."

"I do not understand you—what do you mean by that? Do you still mean to be obstinate about this money?"

"I am not obstinate, Philip; but I shall do what I believe to be right, and I shall relinquish everything to my Wentworth."

This last name came hard to her, and with a sob, for she realized as she spoke how entirely another world hitherto occupied the place which had hitherto belonged to her alone.

"You are determined to do it, then?" he said moodily.

"Yes, I must."

"Will you give me up also, Arley?" Philip asked in a cruel tone.

She grew so white at this that he was frightened, and regretted having asked the question.

Very slowly she went toward him, and, looking up into his face, she said, in a husky, pained tone:

"When I spoke those words which made me your wife, a few hours ago

they were like solemn oaths taken in the presence of God. I promised to love and honor you—to cleave unto you until death should separate us. Do you think after such vows that I could easily give you up? My heart is nearly broken by what you have told me today—that instead of loving me in return, you have only been seeking my miserable money! Nay—as he opened his lips as if about to speak—"you need not try to palliate your act, for I know that that was your principal object; I was simply a necessary incubus, it was cruel—it was an ignominy—my love, my confidence, myself—"

She wrung her hands in her misery, and her face was almost convulsed with pain.

"But," she went on, without waiting for him to reply even if he had desired to do so, "can it be possible that I would be willing, as you intimated a moment ago, to have the tie which united us, dissolved? Do you wish to be free of me now that you have discovered that I shall bring you no money?"

"Arley—I wish you would not ask such absurd questions," Philip replied, uneasily; but he did not utter his own word of comfort or love; he did not, as almost any other man would have done, take her tenderly into his arms, and tell her that she was more to him than a hundred fortunes, that he would work for her with all his might, and, cheered by her great love, he would surmount every obstacle and win wealth for her in the end.

"How can I help asking you, after all that you have acknowledged to me?" she cried with a little burst of scorn, then added with sudden dignity: "But, no, I will say no more about that. I am your wife, and it belongs to you to take care of me to the best of your ability. You won me, and I gave myself to you in good faith, and now I will not be disgraced in the eyes of the world. I suppose I could do what others have done—refuse to receive so much as a crust from your hand, and go out into the world and battle for myself. But I will not; I will take whatever you can give me—and I can be content with very little—so that I am allowed to retain my self-respect. You have ruined my life, and I feel that, after what has passed between us during this hour, I can never be more to you than a wife in name—the tie that binds us is but a mockery."

But, to all outward appearances, she was the same. She was calm, and her lips were set in a smile, but her eyes were burning like coals of fire, and her hands were clenched in fury.

"I have none," he briefly replied.

"Then, Arley, you make me now? We cannot remain here, of course, as we are situated."

"Where will you go?" he asked as if he were entirely passive in the matter.

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

"I have no choice in the matter," she returned coldly, "if—and here her voice grew strained and hard—"if you had loved me, I would have gone to the ends of the earth with you, lived in a cabin and shared any hardship, doing it no sacrifice; now, however, I can only try to make the best of my fate, and by striving to do my duty."

Her eyes blazed.

How weakly he was trying to shirk the responsibility of their future upon her.

"I will go wherever it is proper that you should take me," she said, with dignity; "you know best what you can afford to do."

"Are you willing to go into obscurity with me—to give up the society in which you have been in the habit of mingling, and bear to have your friends pass you by as the wife of a poor man?"

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF

ACHES AND PAINS.

For headache (whether sick or nervous), toothache, neuralgia, rheumatism, lumbago, pain and weakness in the back, spine or kidneys, pain around the liver, pleurisy, swelling of the joints and pains of all kinds, the application of Radway's Ready Relief will afford immediate ease, and its continued use for a few days will effect a permanent cure.

RHEUMATISM.
Dr. Radway & Co.: I have been a sufferer from rheumatism for more than six months. I could not raise my hands to my head or put my hands behind me, or even take off my own shirt. Before I had finished three-fourths of a bottle of Radway's Ready Relief I could use my arms as well as ever. You can see why I have such great faith in your Ready Relief. Yours truly, W. C. BAKER, 500 Julia street, New Orleans.

FIRST PAINLESS NIGHT IN THREE MONTHS.
I received the Ready Relief on Friday, by night express, used the same at 3 o'clock, and had a painless night, for the first time in three months. Used the Ready Relief again on Saturday and Sunday mornings and nights, with the same result. I had a broken arm and shoulder out of joint, or dislocated; was set all right, but remained painful till I used your remedy. Thanks for your prompt attention. Yours respectfully, G. G. DOSE, Maryland, Otsego County, N. Y.

IMMEDIATE ASSISTANCE.
There are many complaints where immediate assistance is required to suspend and check diseased action. In cases of this kind Radway's Ready Relief is an important and infallible assistant, in many cases curing the patient before the doctor reaches the house. Croup, Diphtheria, Influenza, Croup, Spasms, Burns, Scalds, Accidents, Chills, Gunshot Wounds, Poisonous Bites of Dogs, Snakes, Stings of Insects, etc., etc. In a few moments the wonderful properties of the Ready Relief are exhibited and relief, disease arrested and exterminated before it is developed.

RADWAY'S READY RELIEF USED ALSO INTERNALLY.—A half to a teaspoonful in half a tumbler of water will in a few minutes cure Cramps, Spasms, Sour Stomach, Nausea, Vomiting, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Dysentery, Cholera, Morbus, Diarrhea, Colic, Flatulency and all internal pains.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
RADWAY & CO., 55 Elm Street, New York City, Propriet