The uncatholic king of Italy would not allow twenty-two bishops to take possession of their sees. The king was very like Henry VIII., who wanted to have several of his courtiers made bishops. These courtiers would say "Amen" to everything that was his wish. In presenting the offering of the congregation to the pope his holiness expressed himself very grateful indeed, for he remarked, "I have nothing now to depend on but the alms of my people." The government of the church requires so many cardinals, theologians and secretaries to manage its affairs that the expense falls heavily indeed upon the pope. The British empire

SPENDS A GREAT DEAL OF MONEY upon its officers scattered throughout the world, but the empire of the pope—the world, but the empire of the pope—the spiritual empire—is far greater, three to one at least. The pope has to pay all his officers, vicar-generals and missionaries throughout the world. He was much grieved at the conflict now waged by infidels in various shapes and forms under the names of agnostics, freethinkers, skeptics, etc., not only against the Catholic faith, but against the faith of all Protestants who believed in Jesus Christ. The latter, however, is divided, but infidelity finds the Catholic church a compact and powerful body tholic church a compact and powerful body and will never waiver from her respect, but cut off its gangrene members—any mem-bers who will speak out against the faith of the church. He believed that the people of Toronto did not look upon this salvation army as an auxiliary of Christ to bring true worshippers to true religion, and yet the heads of the church of England

SUPPORTED SUCH AN ARMY as that to help them sustain christianity. as that to help them sustain christianity. The archbishop of Canterbury sent them subscriptions to help this work of christianizing London. If London required such apostles they must be very low indeed. Europe at present, both political and religious was in a very sad condition. This unfortunate war in Egypt will complicate things very much and people should pray for the peace of the world. England is bearing the brunt of the battle, and the other powers quietly lock on, waiting to see if there is something to fall to them. Ireland is considered a catholic country as the lics are at least five to one, and to i vestigate or to explain away any of the miseries of Ireland would be to investigate in a certain sense the Catholic church, for the honor of the Catholic church is at stake in Ireland. One-twentieth of the Irish people were dissatisfied and enraged at the oppression of the people. These

NOT COMMITTED BY THE REAL IRISH. The murders are done in a scientific way and with such extreme precaution and with such level shots that they cannot be supposed for a moment to be the work of the Irish. Viewing the question of Catholic Ireland and the murders as given in one of the German papers as to its relation with the Cavendish and Burke murder, he was struck by the fact stated that the only Irish thing about it was that the police al-Irish thing about it was that the police allowed these men to escape at all. There were well grounded suspicions that this murder had no relation whatever to Irish politics at the time it occurred. During the last year 50,000 persons had been evicted. Ten thousand men were now threatened with evictions. Let them who justly enough denounced agrarian crime consider what an eviction was—the family turned homeless one statistics. turned homeless on a roadside, the women and children screaming, the roof torn off the house, the little stock of provisions scattered to the winds, and all this under BAYONETS OF BRITISH SOLDIERS:

and it was not so wonderful if men turned on their oppressors. In Rome he heard nothing that disgraced Ireland, and when the pope heard of the poor people and the evictions, he was horrified. He threw up wickions, he was normed. He threw up his hands, looked towards heaven and sighed but said nothing. He would take another occasion to tell them of the miracles of Knock, but he had visited the parish, and before entering it had made full inquiries about the miracles. The parish of Knock was in charge of a priest of exceptional learning and judgment, who had carefully investigated the evidence for the PERSUADED IN THEIR TRUTH.

The archbishop of Tuan believed in them, the primate of all Ireland believed in the apparition at Knock. He himself was per-suaded of its truth. But when he went to Knock he went not to investigate but to pray. He feared from the incessant rains in England as well as Ireland they would have an other very bad harvest this year and they would need assistance. There was not would need assistance. There was not a village in the United States or Canada that could not take a few of the 350,000 heads of families who are each starving upon five or six acres of poor land. The Island Baths.

The swimming baths on the island were well patronized on Saturday—so well indeed that many had to return without enjoying that many had to return without enjoying a plunge owing to the rooms being occupied. This need not happen or only to a limited extent if the managers would place some reasonable restriction on the time for which bathers may retain possession of the keys of the bathing rooms. On Saturday a number of boys and young men kept the keys nearly all the afternoon. Most of the time they were not bathing but disporting themselves on rafts or on the beach thereby excluding others from the enjoyment of a bath after paying for their trip over on the ferry. If the baths are to become popular this sort of thing will have to be stopped.
