Lilian. Now you have made me happy indeed. The Hudson Tunnel Hero.

I don't want to be kissed and thanked, said Mrs. Challacome, putting up her hand to goard her hard cheek from the proffered embrace. I don't look on it as a subject for kisses and congratulation. You are marrying you own fortune, and taking your own ways and I have consented simply to give your dear father peace in his own house.

This sudden consideration for his quiet made John Challacombe stare a little, but he said nothing.

Here is your lover's letter,' continued Mrs. Challacombe; 'perhaps you would like to see it. Read it; your father has not heard it yet.'
And, with blushes coming and going swiftly, and eyes shining with dewy light, Lilian read this—

Dear Mrs. Challacombe,—Enclosed in the same envelope in which I received it, I send you a letter which has evidently reached me through a mistake of Mr. Harwood's.'

What does that mean? asked Captain Charlacombe.

It means that young Harwood put his letters into wrong envelopes, and I got Captain Thurlstone's, and he got mine. Go on, Lilian.'

MIDDLE IN THE AIR LOCK—A VIVID FIECE OF WEITING.

N. Y. Herald, July 22.]

Woodland stood by the inner door of the caiseon. His quick order to work had come too late, and he called the retreat as promptly as he had ordered the advance. 'Quick, boys, get into the lock,' he shouted, and in tead of passing in among the first, he stood by the door helping one after about be come and the inner door of the lock could be another in.

Eight men passed. They were not yet safe. If the others could get in and the inner door of the lock could be as part payment for new ones.

The dow was fast. One man was falling by what time, should block the way they would be almost safe. But as the internet was the work to elieve it. 'You are greedy,' she said, pressing his hand against her cheek to hide its burning rose.

'Yes, I am greedy of sweet words to day; to morrow I shall ask for kisses.'

'Have you not had enough to-day?' she asked, half shy, half smiling, as she met his eyes for just one second and dropped her own with sudden bounding of her heart.

The door a little; then the frenzied men on the inside (for the water was bubbling about their shoulders now) caught the iron edge and pulled with all their strength. When roast, boiled and broiled chicken, mutton chop and beef steak have long held a recognized position in the invalid's bill of fare, the merits of a veal sweetbread have been sadly overlooked. When properly cooked it is a delicious dish, and may tempt a capricious appetite that has grown weary of other viands. A sweetbread should be parboiled for a short time until quite soft, and then fried in a little butter to a delicate brown. It may be served with gravy or white sauce.

Delicious oatmeal gruel may be made by stirring a cupful of oatmeal into a bowl of water, allowing it to stand for a few minutes until the coarsest particles have fallen to the bottom, pouring off the water, and repeating this once or twice. The water must then be boiled, stirring it constantly until it is sufficiently cooked.

Few persons understand properly the art of making lemonade. The lemon should first be rolled between the hands until it is quite soft, the skin remove with a sharp knife, and every pip extracted, the lemon being held over a tumbler that no juice may be lost in the operation. The pulp should then be divided into small pieces and the sugar thoroughly mixed with it. Last of all, the requisite amount of water should be added.
