summer frock models, in which empire lines are paramount. The popular vogue of silks, flowered, checked and striped, is also a happy one in this respect, for the success of the flare is greatly due to the "stand-out" qualities of these lovely materials. The high, belted over blouse, and the short, full skirt of flowered taffeta are rendered most charming when the under bodice, with its standing collar and long gathered sleeves, is of some delicate net or organdie, with introduction of tiny buttons and narrow black valvet ribbon.

Full skirts are made to flare in various ways. They may be gathered at the waist, cut circular and hung from a yoke line, or they may be laid into smart. close-pleated effects. The pleated skirts are very fashionable just now, made up in covert cloth or serge, to be worn with the swagger sports coat.

Yoked styles give ample opportunity for the "severe" frock with its smartly tailored biouse, button-trimmed, and usually displaying high collars and long tight sleeves. The yokes come in decided variety, some being deeply pointed, others scalloped and buttoned down over the lower skirt section, while many of the most up-to-date models show the introduction of smart set-in pockets placed at the sides in a sloping manner.

For Summer Frocks.

The full gathered skirt which permits of the high waist line and the little empire pointed or gathered slouses is universally favored for summer frocks.

Laces, deep flouncings, embroideries and all the sheer warm weather fabrics are being shown in the advanced summer frock models, in which empire lines are paramount. The popular vogue of silks, flowered, checked and stream of the collar or two.
