

THE STILL HOUR

I want no weeping, but I ask a prayer
That God would rob the evil I have done
Of harmful power, and make my influence fair.

Then as my breath grows fainter, and my eyes
Darken forever to the endearing sun,
Kissing my forehead, say your last good-byes.