It is pos-sible that if such a movement spreads it will aid in sustaining the market around the present basis, but sharp price advances would in all probability be followed by renewed selling against some of the unsold cotton held in the South, and unfortunately as long as there is no improvement in the demand for goods, the mills will doubtless continue the policy of buying for improvement and the product of the security of th continue the policy of buying for immediate requirements only.

The drygoods market is still in an unsettled condition, with a general lack of interest shown on the part of buyers for finished goods. Commission houses report that a broader business cannot be obtained until some of the credit restrictions are removed and increased banking accommodations are furnished to facilitate plans for forward delivery and export of manufactured goods. Both manufacturers and jobbers are offering cotton productions at concessions, but merchants are holding off in hope of disposing of old lines of goods bought at higher values.

Retailers who have reduced prices are doing an increased business, but the public generally are holding aloof for a still lower level on the basis of the decline in raw material. Most retail prices are said to be based on cost rather than
