A First Class Creed!
Vivie, for a variety of reasons, and to prove its possibility, sheds her name and sex, and much of her personality (she BLOSSOMS as a boy) and turns herself into Mr. David Vavasour Williams, son of a Parson in Wales, and later a Barrister-at-Law. How she does it, makes a story of absorbing interest. Also, how sne lays the character definitely aside, only to be used for masquerade purposes; how celing the business profits tax? When it was introduced there was, erhaps, some reason for it, but, peaking generally, it does not seem ecessary that it be continued longer. In fact, there is plenty of evidence to show that it is acting as a deterrent to trade and industry. Manufacturers especially have been hampered and handicapped by the tax, as well as those who would aunch new enterprises. In the old country it has been abolished because it was cramping and crippling business of all kinds. Expert Investigators believe that such stagnation as Canadian trade and industry is suffering from is due in some measure to the business profits of the Revelation was not just an arch, but a circle, encompassing all, like the rainbow which it is said travelers see in the high Alps. It is great during trial to find coming to us more and more of cheer, and to grow courageous and patient as we see life's events in the sustaining illumination of the rainbow surrounding the throne. Passing from these comforting considerations of the Divine love and mercy, the fundamental significance of the recorded vision of St. John appears in its first words: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ." That is the disclosure running through all its amazing imagery, written down as one has said, "with a pen dipped in earthquake and eclipse, in the colors of heaven and the shadows of the bottomless pit." Therefore it is through the effulgent ray shining from The Cross that a wondering humanity may discern the beauty of Divine redemption and restoring The instincts of the Old Masters guided them aright in painting a halo above the thorn-crowned Redeemer. "It is the glory of the religion of the Lord Jesus," observes Edward Henry Emmett, "that for nineteen hundred years it has been meeting the needs of a sin-torn world, adjusting itself to the mode of life and thought of all people, and yet remaining true to its life-giving power and principles. The Cross still stands God's one all-sufficient remedy for humanity." There is a rainbow of hope and mercy around The Cross! Hence, it becomes the days of Lent, and, indeed, at all times, to so reflect its radiance that supreme message in life is the Chris-

A Nation-Wide Poll of Industry

Why business should be depressed in a land overflowing with supplies that the rest of the world is suffering for, with ships lying idle that could carry them, will puzzle future generations, and to say that such a depression cannot last long in the face of the whole world's need of our products, is very much like saying

THE LITERARY DIGEST has asked hundreds of authorities covering the entire country, comprising business leaders, professors of economics, and financial editors of daily papers for their opinion as to the prospect of prosperity's return—and when. The answers are published in this week's issue, and people who can see nothing but gloom all around the business horizon may revise their ideas when they glance over the returns. Of course, it is very much like a survey of a battlefield where the forces are already re-arming and re-forming, and are here and there beginning to advance again. Moreover, the American business army is one that has never known defeat, and the reason why is evident in the tone of unconquerable optimism that runs through even the casualty reports.

"Actual business recovery to begin about April 1;" "expect gradual improvement from now forward;" "expect business recovery gradual until inauguration—then rapid;" "expect business recovery to begin probably in spring;" "recovery is already under way;" "conditions will improve from now on." These expressions reflect the general tenor of the many replies we have received from big business leaders throughout the country.

This poll of American industry is nation-wide, and covers every state in the union and practically every important industry. Do not fail to read it in this week's DIGEST, February 12.
