HYPNOTIC EXPERIMENT WAS FATAL

Young Negro Buried Alive Under Scheme of Self-Confident Hypnotist

MAN WAS BURIED SEVENTEEN HOURS

Ventilation Inadequate When Disinterred Was Pulseless and Roasting Hot

An astonishing story of a young compositor who was hypnotized and practically buried alive by a self-styled professor is disclosed in the latest West Indian newspapers to reach London. "Doc Seaton" was recently arrested at Bridgetown, Barbados, on a charge preferred by Lieut. W. C. Wharton, of "unlawfully and feloniously killing and slaying" Randolph Soden, aged 20, a compositor, in Queen's Park, Bridgetown, on Sept. 16. It appears that the "professor," who is a native of Trinidad, and has for some years been touring the West Indies, giving displays as a hypnotist and illusionist, announced with the usual fanfare, that he would hypnotize and bury a woman in a grave 5 ft deep in Queen's Park, and bring her back to life after an interval of three days. At the last moment, however, the woman begged to be excused, and Soden, a colored man, volunteered, to take her place. A crowd of 300 spectators was admitted at 6d. a head to witness the new 20th century "miracle."

The Burial.
Soden, according to the evidence at the inquest, mounted and sat on the bier, and when the coffin was closed, removed a portion of his clothing, and donned a sleeping suit handed to him by the professor, who, in turn, attired Soden in a red-floored ceremonial robe. The professor then proceeded to make the familiar "passes" with his hands over Soden's face and forehead, the young man's eyes slowly closing and his body gradually becoming rigid under the treatment. Soden's body was now placed in the coffin, which had a glass panel in the lid at the head and the coffin was lowered shaft covered with earth, a wooden staff covered with a red cloth, was placed over the glass panel to 3 ft. above the ground. The spectators were thus able to see the neck and shoulders of the hypnotized man.

The day was Sunday, and as the authorities refused to permit the professor to charge admission on that day, he decided to disinter Soden after 17 hours' burial, when it was quickly seen that the youth's condition was hopeless.

Pulseless and Roasting Hot.
Dr. T. G. Williams, senior resident physician at the General Hospital, and other doctors testified at the inquest that the disinterred man was pulseless and roasting hot, his nails and lips were purple, a vein in his arm refused to bleed when opened, and particles of sand were lodged in his eye. Various drugs were vainly injected in an effort to save his life. He died two hours after entering the hospital.

Mr. H. W. Reece, K.C., Solicitor-general, appeared on behalf of the police at the inquest. Further evidence showed that the sliding glass covering on the lid at the head of the coffin could be left partially opened, the professor apparently relying on this camouflage to permit the spectators to obtain air, but at the same time to deceive the spectators, to whom the arrangement was invisible.

The medical evidence, none the less, showed that Soden's death was due to asphyxiation caused by imperfect ventilation, although the jury brought in a verdict of death due to misadventure.

Rippling Rhymes

The man who's always serious, who's solemn all his days, is prone to pain and weary in, in fifty-seven ways. These times be dark and troublesome, with war and dead men's bones; still let your laughter bubble soon, it does more good than groans. I read of endless slaughtering on red fields over there, and yet no tears are watering the hand-dwms that I wear; 'tis not because I'm frivolous, or hardened, that I smile; but grief will only shrivel you, and isn't worth our while. I can't conceive what Jerry meant—that prophet of old days—who cut out joy and merriment, a long lament to him, for a man whose voice is pitiful, whose face is like a hearse, will queer a whole blamed city full, and break men's hearts or worse. He's bad enough when breezily the world's joys on apace, when things are coming easily to all the human race; but when the world needs heartening, and tears like fountains flow, when souls and nerves need smartening, why multiply the woe? With sighs for this world's misery I waste no precious time, but with my weapon-sensory I steal some cheerful rhyme.

Good Night Stories

HOW THE MOON FLOWER GOT HER NAME.

Once upon a time in a beautiful garden lived lonely White Flower. Her gayly-colored companions of the garden whispered among themselves until White Flower became very unhappy.

"How any one could dislike Mr. Sun is more than I can see!" exclaimed Miss Lily.

"Maybe it's because her gown's so very plain," whispered Red Rose, shaking the dew from her velvet petals.

"Even the Bees and Butterflies don't seem to care for her," said Miss Tulip. "Well, I for one can't understand her ways."

White Flower heard her neighbors, and her pale head drooped on her stem.

"Yeg, I'm pale and common-looking, that's why the Bees and the Butterflies pass me by," sighed White Flower, and she grew very lonely and sad.

One evening not long after the sun had slipped down behind the hills White Flower was awakened by a gentle tapping at her blossom home, and a tiny fairy stepped inside when White Flower opened her doors.

"I'm Silver Fairy from Moonbeam-land," exclaimed the visitor, "may I have a sip from your honey well?"

"Happy to be of service, White Flower gave Silver Fairy a drink, and the two became fast friends. They played all the night together, and when the sun peeped from behind the hills Silver Fairy found that Mother Moon had sailed away and had left her.

White Flower gently folded her perfumed petals around Silver Fairy to keep out the sun's brilliant glow, and the morning breezes soon lulled them both to sleep.

Even the bluebird's or the robin's song wouldn't make White Flower open her doors, and she held Silver Fairy until Mother Moon sailed back into view.

After this White Flower was never lonely, for all day long her doors were closed to the Bees and Butterflies, but just as soon as the Moon in her silver boat sailed across her Sea of Clouds White Flower awakened and played with the Silver Fairies from Moonbeam-land.

"Moon struck!" said Miss Lily to her neighbors.

"Why not?" exclaimed Bluebird.

"The Sun's light is too strong for her, so she seeks the companionship of the Moon Folk," for Blue Bird had built his home near White Flower, and marvelled at the wonderful perfume that filled the air when White Flower opened her fragrant doors to Silver Fairy.

If you happen in that garden any evening at all you'll see White Flower with her smiling face turned to the Moon. And if you're bitted with fairy sight you will plainly see the silver fairies from Moonbeam-land dancing over her soft petals, sending sweet perfume out on the night breezes, and the Blue Bird has called her Moon Flower.
