His death will be regretted and his memory cherished be many. The funeral took place on Tuesday, and the large attendance fully attested the respect in which he was held.—Expositor will, our principles were such as would return our candidate by a sweeping ma-jority. (Cheers.) He then called for ny. The and the would all work to ensure success, not so the remuch for him as for the principles they unheld.

Mr. Somerville, on rising, was greeted with great applause. He thanked the convention for nominating him. He stated, however, that he reasons for refusing the nomination.
One of these was the bad state of his health, which would not permit him to make a personal canvass, and another make a personal canvass, and another reason was that he felt that he had not the full confidence of the leaders of the party. He again returned thanks to the party. He again returned manks to the convention for proposing him as a candidate, but said that he could not stand.

Mr. John McCrae, differed from Mr. Somerville. He had no doubt but that refused to accept the nomination.

The Presbytery Roll for the year was made up.

The following are the Commissioners appointed to the next General Assembly: Ministers—Messrs. Ure, Ross, Brown, Grant, Fletcher, Hartley and Ferguson. Elders — Messrs. Matheson, Spence, Gardiner, Agnew, Scott, Wilson and Strachan:

Mr. Thomson, student, read trial discourses which were very satisfactory.

Mr. Gracey presented the report of the Committee appointed to consider the financial returns of the past year, setting forth the average contributions and suit. He was glad to know that we had better men at the head of affairs now. He referred in high terms to Mr. Blake's appointed to the latter, who stood head and shoulders above any other public man in the country. He trusted they could all turn out and give him a hearty reception at Clinton to-morrow. He hoped they would all do their duty in the present contest, record their votes in the Centre Riding and assist all they could in the North and South Ridings.
