By THORNTON W. BURGESS. Yowler, the Bob Cat, is quite as smart as is Bobby Coon. Few tricks can be played on Yowler without his can be played on Yowler without his knowledge. He knew exactly what had happened when Bobby Coon had made use of him to get rid of the dog and hunters. You see, he had heard that dog chasing Bobby Coon, and when he had first heard that dog the latter's voice was coming from a part of the Green Forest where Yowler had not been that evening. So, when the dog began following his (Yowler's) trail, Yowler knew that he had been led there. Cn his way home at daybreak, Yowler passed the hollow tree in which lived Babby hollow tree in which lived Babby

"I'll get even with you yet, Bobby Coon," he growled in his uglies sounding voice. But Bobby, curled up in his bed inside the hollow tree, simply grinned up in his bed inside the simply grinned.

However, Yowler had his chance the very next night. He had first taken pains to find out where Babby Coon was. Bobby was fishing along the Laughing Brook. Yowler went roaming about near the edge of the Green Forest, hoping that the dog and hunters would return again that night. He wasn't disappointed. He had been watching only a short time when he saw the lanterns of the hunters, and heard the sniffing of the dog. Yowler came down from the tree in which he had been waiting and crossed almost in front of ing and crossed almost in front of that dog. His scent was so strong little sooner he would have fooled Yowler and the dog, but it happens that he didn't cross quite soon enough and Yowler saw him. Now Yowler doesn't like the water and he had no intention of wetting his feet even to get even with Bobby Coon. There were some big stones, and from one to another of these Yowler jumped. But before he started he waited until the dog was so near that he couldn't help but see him. The dog did see him and he went splashing across the brook. He didn't mind the water in the least. When he got across he made straight for the place where he had last seen Yowler. Right there Yowler's scent disappeared. You see Yowler had made a long jump to a fallen tree, and along this he had run and jumped from it to the trunk of a (Copyright, 1925, by T. W. Burgess.)

Finally Bobby crossed to the other

oig hemlock tree. Now he was nicely hidden half way up this tree.

But if the scent of Yowler had ysteriously vanished there was another scent to take its place. It was the scent of Bobby Coon. That dog knew that he was supposed to be hunting Bobby Coon. He wasted no time trying to find the scent Yowler the Bob Cat. Instea picked up the trail of Bobby and away he went, barking as only hunting dog can.
Poor Bobby. He had felt so sure that dog. His scent was so strong that it was not to be resisted. Away went Yowler, and away went the dog after him. Straight to the Laughing Frook Yowler led the way. Bobby Coon heard him coming, or rather he heard the barking of the dog. Bobby waded across the brook. He knew that the water would destroy his scent.

Now, had Bobby crossed just a little sooner he would have fooled Yowler and the dog, but it happens that by crossing the brook he would be safe that this was a great sur-prise to him. He didn't feel like
