The announcement of the assignment Rodger, Maclay & Co., soap manufacturer of this city, has created more than ordin ary interest in business circles from the fact that in the suspension of one of the three factories in Toronto devoted to that industry, the state of the trade was thought by some to be indicated by their forced position. An investigation into the causes leading to the suspension the causes leading to the suspension proves that such is not the case; as they have found a ready market for their goods, and it is generally believed the soap business is not overdone, although a sharp competition has latterly been kept up between the Toronto factories and those of Hamilton, Windsor and Montreal. It appears that from the start nearly two years ago, the firm have been real. A few days ago the Globe devoted two columns of abuse to Mr. Thomas White, the occasion being a story, which probably for that purpose it set afloat, that Sir Leonard Tilley was about to withdraw from the cabinet, and that his place was to be taken by the member for Cardwell. The attack did not merit attention, for the simple reason that Mr. White is sufficiently wellknow, and has been before the public for a sufficiently long time to make it quite distances by land or beneath harmless. We are obliged to many of our contemporaries on both sides of politics for the reference they have made to it. The Winnipeg Sun, for instance, an opposition paper says :- "If it be true that Mr. Thomas White,

Wherever in the cooling, shrinking crust is taken away by contraction, pressure, chemical action, emission of lavas, corroding and heated waters, occasional explosions, aided possibly by terrestrial, meteorological or astronomical causes, the strata fell in; these may be hunthe strata fell in; these may be that dreds of miles in extent and leagues in thickness with more or less violent depression, producing a shock which may be transmitted to great distances by land or beneath the water. In certain fractures of the crust, produced even in remote geological ages and in favorable strata, much heat and consequent chemical action may liquefy the surrounding rocks and cause a flow of lava. This undermining or corrosion I conceive to be the predisposing cause of earthquakes, the shock being the effect carried for long distances with a violence and diquakes, the shock being the effect carried for long distances, with a violence and direction depending on the elastic character of the strata. In the old geological times the dislocations or uplifts of strata, called "faults," were doubtless accompanied by earthquakes and were then their most common cause; but, as the tension and common cause; but, as the tension and pressure which formed the then immense folding have in a great measure ceased, subsidence may be a more satisfactory exploration than a pressure than the satisfactory exploration and the satisfactory exploration planation than upheaval.

A Belief that They are Caused by Subsider, or Caused No. 1. A. M., M.D., of Boston, says in a lecture on earthquakes: The old theory of the causes of volcanees have gradually lost the confidence of geologists. Mallet's theory is now generally admitted as the best explanation, to wit, that in cooling from a highly heated nebulous matter, the crust of the earth has shrunk upon the centre, more readily according to its thinness, and the most so, therefore, in former geological ages. This shrinking and falling of strata of immense extent and thickness, by the motion, develop a great amount of heat, sufficient

As connected with the cause of earthquakes here maintained it may be mentioned that the 1794 eruption of Vesuvius yielded 46,000, 100 cubic feet of lava, that of Etna, in 1669, twice that amount, and that of Skaptar Jokul, in Iceland, in two years, 21 cubic miles. Where the heat generated by cubic miles. Where the heat generated by friction of subsidence is not sufficient to iliquefy the rocks, mud volcanoes, as in liquefy the expiring forces. Though in such localities you may expect the earthquake, as a rule, you occur evertywhere, at all scasons of the proved, except as a mere accessory; they occur everywhere, at all scasons of the year, and in all geological formations and times. They seem to follow no laws of periodicity, and are apparently independent of volcanoes. The theory of their mature usually accepted now is that of a mature of the strate through which it passes — a vibratory movement like that of a wave of sound, transmitted, reflected and refracted by the earth; it may originate beneath the sea, causing a destructive tidal wave hundreds of miles distant. This wave can be measured by cunningly devised instruments.
