NOTICES OF THE PRESS.

"We shall not say that Dr. Dawson is in every case successful in solving the difficulties and in answering the questions and objections with which he has to deal. But this we may affirm with safety, that he approaches every question in a calm, devout, and philosophical spirit; that he does not seek to belittle the objections he attempts to answer, that he never substitutes declamation for argument, nor treats those with whom he is at issue except with the courtesy of a gentleman and the kindness of a Christian."—Toronto Globe.

"The book is the latest and most valuable contribution to the elucidation of the Cosmogony of the Bible, and of the ancient traditions and modern sciences. We heartily commend it to all thoughtful readers."—Telegraph, St. John, N. B.

"The work is one of which Canadians may be proud to think that the author is a Canadian also. It will command many a reader, and afford much food for thought."—Herald, Montreal.

"We have no doubt that to a large number Dr. Dawson's book will prove a real 'Aid to Faith.' The book is so exhaustive that any attempt to indicate its contents must fail. Canada has reason to rejoice that so valuable a book as the 'Origin of the World' has issued from her press."—Bellevue Magazine.

"Dr. Dawson is an original observer, a veteran field-worker in geology, and, at the same time, a consistent and able master in divinity. This work, with the last previous one of the writer, 'The Story of the Earth and Man,' furnish quite an encyclopædia of information on the subject, characterized by admirable accuracy, candour and fulness."—London Freeman.

"Principal Dawson's wide range of scientific acquirements, his learning as a Biblical student, the ingenuity of many of his arguments, and his pleasant style of writing, combine to make this work one of the best of its class."—London Arabist.

"He is well known as the discoverer of the very earliest forms of life known to the geologist, and his qualifications as an interpreter of the Biblical side of the question are abundantly illustrated in the volume before us."—London Literary World.

"The volume is one well deserving of attentive perusal, and from the nature of its contents should find many readers amongst young men."—London Book.

"To all interested in what we may now term the literature of creation, we commend this book as one of the best of its kind."—Glasgow Herald.

"It is of supreme importance just now that such subjects as cosmogony, evolution, the antiquity of man, and creation, should be dealt with by competent men, who are neither blind nor imperfectly accomplished in science. Dr. Dawson answers these requirements perfectly, and therefore we heartily welcome this work."—London Christian.

"Any book written by Professor Dawson should command the respectful attention of every thoughtful reader, as being the work of one who has done much good work, both in physical science and in literature; and the present work will not disappoint those who expected a careful book written in graceful language."—London Inquirer.
