

CHAP.	PAGE
20. A description of several other islands in the neighbourhood of Otaheite, with various incidents; a dramatic entertainment; and many particulars relative to the customs and manners of the inhabitants . . .	108

BOOK II.

1. The passage from Oteroah to New Zealand; incidents which happened on going ashore there, and while the ship lay in Poverty Bay . . .	121
2. A description of Poverty Bay, and the face of the adjacent country. The range from thence to Cape Turnagain, and back to Tolaga; with some account of the people and the country, and several incidents that happened on that part of the coast . . .	127
3. The range from Tolaga to Mercury Bay, with an account of many incidents that happened both on board and on shore. A description of several views exhibited by the country, and of the Hippias, or fortified villages of the inhabitants . . .	138
4. The range from Mercury Bay to the Bay of Islands. An expedition up the River Thames. Some account of the Indians who inhabit its banks, and the fine timber that grows there. Several interviews with the natives on different parts of the coast, and a skirmish with them upon an island . . .	148
5. Range from the Bay of Islands round North Cape to Queen Charlotte's Sound; and a description of that part of the coast . . .	157
6. Transactions in Queen Charlotte's Sound. Passage through the Strait which divides the two islands, and back to Cape Turnagain. Horrid custom of the inhabitants. Remarkable melody of birds. A visit to a Hippiah, and many other particulars . . .	163
7. Range from Cape Turnagain southward along the eastern coast of Poenamoo, round Cape South, and back to the western entrance of Cook's Strait, which completed the circumnavigation of this country; with a description of the coast, and of Admiralty Bay. The departure from New Zealand, and various particulars . . .	173
8. A general account of New Zealand; its first discovery, situation, extent, climate, and productions . . .	182
9. A description of the inhabitants, their habitations, apparel, ornaments, food, cookery, and manner of life . . .	187
10. Of the canoes and navigation of the inhabitants of New Zealand; their tillage, weapons, and music; government, religion, and language: with some reasons against the existence of a Southern Continent . . .	193

BOOK III.

CHAP.	PAGE
1. The run from New Zealand to Botany Bay, on the East Coast of New Holland, now called New South Wales; various incidents that happened there; with some account of the country and its inhabitants . . .	201
2. The range from Botany Bay to Trinity Bay; with a further account of the country, its inhabitants, and productions . . .	212
3. Dangerous situation of the ship in her course from Trinity Bay to Endeavour River . . .	227
4. Transactions while the ship was refitting in Endeavour River. A description of the adjacent country, its inhabitants, and productions . . .	232
5. Departure from Endeavour River. A particular description of the harbour there, in which the ship was refitted, the adjacent country, and several islands near the coast. The range from Endeavour River to the northern extremity of the country, and the dangers of that navigation . . .	245
6. Departure from New South Wales. A particular description of the country, its products and people. A specimen of the language, and some observations upon the currents and tides . . .	258
7. The passage from New South Wales to New Guinea, with an account of what happened upon landing there . . .	269
8. The passage from New Guinea to the Island of Savu, and the transactions there . . .	275
9. A particular description of the Island of Savu, its produce and inhabitants, with a specimen of their language . . .	282
10. The run from the Island of Savu to Batavia, and an account of the transactions there while the ship was refitting . . .	292
11. Some account of Batavia, and the adjacent country, with their fruits, flowers, and other productions . . .	299
12. Some account of the inhabitants of Batavia, and the adjacent country, their manners, customs, and manner of life . . .	309
13. The passage from Batavia to the Cape of Good Hope. Some account of Prince's Island, and its inhabitants, and a comparative view of their language, with the Malay and Javanese . . .	316
14. Our arrival at the Cape of Good Hope. Some remarks on the run from Java Head to that place. A description of the Cape and of Saint Helena. With some account of the Hottentots, and the return of the ship to England . . .	322