

and relate his warlike adventures. Among those who did this was a slender and active warrior, not tall, but distinguished by his very thin lips and nose ; he was pointed out to us as the man who had assaulted Mr. Hess's party in the manner which we have already related. Among the many feats which this warrior enumerated he took care to omit his murders of white men. The dance which had accompanied this had nothing particular ; they frequently laughed aloud, and appeared to go through the exercise with much spirit. After the dance had continued some time, a few presents were divided among them : upon receiving them they hastily ran away, apparently as much satisfied as we were.

END OF VOL. I.

---

LONDON:

PRINTED BY COX AND BAYLIS, GREAT QUEEN STREET.