1. 16.

third time, and fired three signal guns, but stood with little hope of reply. To the great joy as the of the crew, three distinct guns were heard norning The apprehensions of all but of the Captain Sowle were now at rest. That caubut still tious commander recollected the instructions patched, given him by Mr. Astor, and determined to ntrance; proceed with great circumspection. He was being a well aware of Indian treachery and cunning. nal guns It was not impossible, he observed, that these t equally cannon might have been fired by the savages od off to themselves. They might have surprised the gave up fort, massacred its inmates; and these signal nt at the guns might only be decoys to ture him across ny apprethe bar, that they might have a chance of had been cutting him off, and seizing his vessel. heir place

e erected

rised and

certainty,

nation, in

blishment

ls bravely

dertaking.

n for the

At length a white flag was descried hoisted as a signal on cape Disappointment. The passengers pointed to it in triumph, but the captain did not yet dismiss his doubts. A beacon fire blazed through the night on the same place, but the captain observed that all these signals might be treacherous.

On the following morning, May 9th, the vessel came to anchor off cape Disappointment,