Preacher Points to Poetry's Effect on Spiritual Life.

STRONG AND YET GENTLE

Evil Condemned Sternly, but Doers of Evil Treated Tenderly.

Dr. Silcox last night delivered a fine address on the poet, Whittier, "The Poet of Humanity.

He showed how the mass of mankind are moved towards God and goodness as much—If not more—by the poetic presentation of high ideals as by the compelling force of close-linked logical

"In zeal for God, in enthusiasm for justice, in sympathy for humanity, in hate for wrong, Whittier was like Amos and Isalah in one. What the prophet was to Israel, he was to the nation. Whittier is one of the most unique figures in the nation's life. He was a mystic—and a rationalist—a saint and a politician—a dreamer of dreams and politician—a dreamer of dreams, and man of affairs. He communed with Christ on the mount of transfiguration, and he mingled with demonized human-ty down in the plain below. In moral courage, he was as magnificent as Savonarola. In gentleness of spirit, he was as sweet-souled as St. Francis of Assissi. With moral vehemence, he denounced the wrong and with Christian

Like a mailed and helmeted man of war, Whittier came forth in the hour when his nation needs of some one to lead the fight for shackled and shattered humanity, and in measures fierce as vengeance he delivered his message, with the result that there mustered "The grand smay of the republic," men who found and faltered not till they had g" ab back to the enslaved millions and to the enslaved millions and to popose Prussian militarism and we need to learn from Whittler the great lesson of hating and fighting the system, but not the people. His Clear Vision.

"With the clear vision of a Wordsworth, Whittier, the poet-prophet saw God in nature. With Browning he saw God in the human soul. Hence his poems are fuller of humane divineness than any poetry in our language.

"No poet ever saw the worth of a man—the sacredness of man—irrespective of class or clime, as did Whittler."
In closing, Dr. Silcox paid a high tribute to the influence of Whittier's teachings on his own teaching and preaching.

teachings on his own teaching and preaching.

"At a critical time in my life, when my early religious beliefs one by one slipped from me—I was left like a ship-wrecked soul on a barren Island, and it was Whittier's reasonable teachings of religion that saved me from the despair of unbelief. He taught me to love God with my mind, my intellect, my reason, so that when all else went I could say with him. To one fixed stake my spirit clings. I know that God is good."

"Out of my own experience I would rather give a man or woman on the verge of moral collapse a marked copy of Whittier than any other book—for I can hardly see how a man could read him for a year without becoming an nim for a year without becoming onthusiastic Christian."

"As a poet, I don't place Whittier on the highest peaks of Parnassus, for I do not rank him with the grand old masters. But I do claim high honors for the poet of humanity. With John Bright, I say, "There is moething spurfous in that man's culture, whose appreciation of Milton and Shelley dulls his ears to the paler, but very refined charm of Whittler."

A GOOD PLACE TO STAY AWAY FROM ALTOGETHER

Beware of the Hotel Lenox, Richmond, Mich. It's own advertising "literature" proves it is no place for any Britisher to spend time or money, at least while it is under the present management. B. S. Murray of this city, who says he used to stop at the hotel, sends to The Advertiser a sample of this advertising on the back of the hotel card, the front of which declares the hotel to be "a good place to stop." The proprietor's name is F. Springborn, said to be a Hungarian. Here's the attempt at poetry:
