(FOR THE BOARD.)
BEAUTIFUL IN DEATH.
His hour was come—'twas midnight—darkness
frowned
O'er nature calm—the moon was hid—no star
Lit up the heavens; dull silence reigned around,
Save that the solemn bell its notes tolled far;
When, lo! a mother fond wept o'er her child,
Who, dying, thus spoke soft in accents mild.
Weep not for me, sweet mother—do not weep—
Though death dissolve this little house of clay,
He can no more—the Lord of life will keep
My soul secure—death's farther ravage stay
Y'though my little infant body die,
I yet shall live beyond the starry sky.
Oh! I shall live in peace, dear mother, there
In that fair land, where the departed great Dwell in one home—a common glory share—
Where spirits perfect, now all blessed meet,
Never to part—never to sin or sigh;
For there God wipes all tears from every eye.
Oh! do not weep so; though I weep, these tears,
Which flood mine eyes, are tears of sacred bliss;
I weep with joy, so glorious heaven appears
To which I go—press nearer—let me kiss
Your grief away—smile mother—do not weep—
Death only is to me a gentle sleep.
My little limbs, so active once, are now
Dumb to command, or I would rise and press
Your arm to my heart, and feel you throw
Your arms around me, gently to caress
With all your heart, but now I can but prove
With whispers soft, and eyes, my even warm love.
I scarce can breathe—scarcely a pulse remains—
Yet I am happy—heavenly love sustains;
The more this body sinks, the more sustains;
His promise precious faithful now I prove;
And would not change this sweet serenity
For all life's joys before so dear to me.
My tongue refuses, or I'd tell you more—
Hark! mother—listen—do you hear that strain?
How sweet! how solemn! listen and adore—
Kneel soft beside me—there it comes again—
Oh! father! still one moment—stay your tears
And mar not such delights with mortal cares.
Oh! mother! is this dying? why, to me
Death gives new vigor, life new more abundant—
Angels of light surround me; mother, see!
They call me—listen—what transporting sound!
Sweet mother! fare thee well! father, I soar
Where sin comes not, and sorrows are no more.
JOHN MORAN.

Miscellany.
AS YOU HAVE OPPORTUNITY.
Mr. Frazier sat reading in his counting-room. He was in the midst of a piece of interesting news, when a lad came to the door and said—
"Do you want a boy, sir?"
Without lifting his eyes from the paper, Mr.
Frazier answered, "No," to the applicant, and in rather a rough way.
Before the lad had reached the street, a considerable crowd had gathered to listen to a re-buking sentence.
"You might have spoken kindly to the poor boy, at least, said conscience. This is an opportunity!"
Mr. Frazier felt the paper fall before his eyes, and turned to look at the lad. He was small—but clean—the innocent, happy, at one of the windows of the counting-room, and the boy glanced back over his shoulder.
A sign from the merchant caused him to return.
"What did you say just now?"
"Do you want a boy, sir?" The lad repeated the words he had spoken, hesitatingly, a few minutes before.
Mr. Frazier looked at him with suddenly awakened interest. He had a fair, girlish face, dark brown eyes and hair, and though smaller and delicate in appearance, stood erect with a manliness of aspect that showed him to be a really consistent of duty in the word.
But there did not seem to be much of that stuff in him that is needed for the battle of life.
"Take a chair," said Mr. Frazier, as involuntary respect for the lad's grating possession of his mind.
The boy sat down, with his large, clear eyes
fixed on the merchant's face.
"How old are you?"
"I was twelve last month, sir," replied the lad.
"What splendid eyes," said the merchant to himself. "And I have seen them before—dark and lustrous as a woman's."
Away, back in the past, the thoughts of Mr.

Frazier went borne on the light from those beautiful eyes; and for some moments he forgot the present in the past. But when he came back into the present again, he had a softer look towards the stranger lad.
"You should go to school a year or two longer," he said.
"I must help my mother," replied the lad.
"Is your mother very poor?"
"Yes, sir, and she is sick."
The lad's voice shook a little, and his soft,
woman's eyes grew brighter in tears that filled them.
Mr. Frazier had a really forgotten the point of interest in the new after which his mind was searching, when the boy interrupted him.
"I don't want a lad myself," said Mr. Frazier,
but maybe I can speak a good word for you,
and that would help you, you know. I think you would make an honest and useful lad. But you are not strong."
"O, yes, sir, I'm strong!" And the boy stood up in a brave spirit.
The merchant look at him with a steady increasing interest.
"What is your name?" he asked.
"Charles—Leonard, sir."
There was a listless change in the merchant's manner, and he turned his face so far away that the boy's eyes could not see his expression. For a long time he sat still and thought—so long that the boy wondered.
"Is your father living?" Mr. Frazier did not look at the boy, but still kept his face away—
his voice was low and not very even.
"No, sir, he died four years ago."
"Where he died?"
"In London, sir."
"How long since you came to America?"
"Two years."
"Have you been in this city ever since?"
"No, sir. We came here with my uncle a year ago. But he died a month after our arrival."
There came another long silence, in which the lad was not able to see the merchant's countenance. But when he did look at him again, he was such a new and kind expression in the eyes, which seemed almost to deceive his face, that he felt assurance in his heart that Mr. Frazier was a good man and would be a friend to his mother.
"Sit here for a little while," said Mr. Frazier, and turning to his desk he wrote a brief note, in which, without permiting the lad to see what he was doing, he enclosed two or three bank bills.
"Take this to your mother," he said, handing the note to the lad.
"You'll try and get me a place, sir, won't you?" The boy lifted to him an appealing look.
"Oh, yes, you shall have a good place—
But stay! you have not told me where you live!"
"At No. ——— Mr. Frazier noted the street and number. "And now take that note to your mother."
The merchant did not resume his newspaper at the lad departed. He had lost his interest in its contents. For a time he sat with his head on his hand, and his eyes on the floor. "For a time he sat with his head on his hand, and his eyes on the floor. "For a time he
