AGRICULTURE

Notes and Suggestions of Practical Utility FOR THE FARM, FIELD, GARDEN AND DAIRY. Cleanings of Interest for Our Country Readers. Grow more turnips. The sheep's nose. Keep your clover clean. Fertilize land in winter. Get your fruit ladder ready. Put lime where sorrel grows. Brown is not fat-producing. Be sure in going into the sheep business that you do not prepare the way to go out of it. The heavier the crop the more fertilizing material is used up and should be returned to the soil. Where one-half of a tree has been sprayed and the other not, the advantage of spraying is very marked. So long as cases are underrated and lumber is overrated as food, cheese will not be popularly appreciated. People think they must have medicine. The wine and humans doctor gives them that which is least harmful. Trying to save a horse from stumbling by use of the check-rein is like trying to lift one's self by the boot-strap. Thomas A. Edison, the inventor, is said to be essentially a vegetarian. He prefers such foods as rice in the sunshine.

THE POULTRY YARD. To Prevent Flying. If your fowls are not high enough, tack a string to each foot, and make the string higher by stretching a strand of wire over the top of the fence, fastening the wire to the strips. Such a fence may not be the best, but it will keep the fowls higher and more serviceable at but small cost. Keep Them Out. At this season of the year one should never let a strange fowl into the yard, for by so doing you may bring lice, cholera, rump and other ailments or drawbacks. Keep a strict quarantine against all new comers, as appearances may deceive you, and a single instance may cause you much annoyance and labor. Cholera Cure. In reply to an inquirer, we will state that there is no cure. The sick birds will not eat, but they will drink. The best results have been obtained when a teaspoonful of liquid carbolic acid has been added to a quart of water and no other water allowed to drink. The entire premises must be well disinfect-ed in order to eradicate the disease. A Ready Roast Cleaner. Fasten a sponge to a stick, as a handle, and have a pint of a mixture of equal parts kerosene and crude petroleum within handy reach. When you clean out the poultry house, wash the roosts, benches and lower sides, with the mixture. In fact, if you cannot conveniently clean out the house, wash the roosts at all events, and you will keep lice down. Set the potato and wash in a convenient place for use, or hang it up in the poultry house. Worms in Poultry. Not only do the intestines the abode of worms at times, but worms have been found in the fowls, or the cause, is unknown but no doubt the cause of some of the diseases leads to the presence of worms. The remedy is spirits of turpentine, which may be administered three times a week by giving two or three drops on a bread crumb or by mixing a tablespoonful of the turpentine intimately with two quarts of corn meal, mixed into a stiff dough, and fed three times a week as much as the fowls will eat at a meal. Because the hens are allowed to roost outside on trees and other places, it does not protect them against lice. We recently inspected the roosts and woodpiles of a farmer who called on us because his hens were dying of cholera (as he supposed), but which we found to be due to lice, they being present on the roosts and on every other place where the hens had been accustomed to roost. Even an old wagon under a shed, which had been used as a roosting place by the hens, was overrun with lice, and it was more difficult to get rid of the vermin than if they had been confined to the poultry house. Lime A Valuable Aid. While it will injure the value of the manure, lime will be found the best and cheapest preventive of lice and disease. A barrel of slaked lime that is in a fine condition, kept conveniently near the poultry house or in one corner of it, will, if freely dusted over the floor, roosts, yards, nests, walls, etc., prevent lice, and as lime will destroy the germs of rot, and also absorb the dampness, it will render the fowls less liable to those ailments which prevent them from being profitable. Only a few minutes daily will be required in sprinkling the lime over the house, and the amount of work that it will save in fighting lice and curing disease, or preventing them, will be of greater benefit than whatever value the droppings may possess if no lime were used. We commend this simple, cheap and valuable assistant to all who wish to avoid the disagreeable portion of poultry-keeping. Mothers are your daughters suffering from any of these ailments peculiar to girls budding into womanhood? Are you yourself suffering from any of those maladies that make woman's life a burden. Queen Victoria having presented the mess of her Prussian regiment (First Dragoon Guards) with a portrait of herself, the officers have sent her a large and handsome colored photograph of the regiment in parade order Colonel Victoria is understood to be proud of her command. R. S. Schwabe, the millionaire print manufacturer of Manchester, England, who arrived at Montreal on Sunday, accompanied by his physician, from a tour around the world, shot himself dead in the Windsor Hotel Tuesday morning. The victim had been in ill health and dependent since the loss of his wife eighteen months ago. The number of registered dentists in the United Kingdom is 4,504, including 1,079 dentists. Many large dentistry establishments in London employ several assistants, and the daily average of teeth extracted by one of the best known firms is said to be 50 teeth per day. A statistical dentist has computed the weekly average "extractions" per dentist in this country to be 450 teeth, and this would mean an annual teeth total of over 10,000,000 cast away ivory.

The art of living well and long—Walk two hours every day; sleep seven hours every night; get up as soon as you wake, eat slowly and never exceed your appetite; drink only enough to quench your thirst; only speak when required, and never say more than half of what you think; write nothing but what you can sign; do nothing that you are afraid to tell; never forget that others rely on you and that you ought not only on them; value money neither more nor less than it is worth—it is a good servant but a bad master. An anecdote is told of a physician who was called to a foreign family to prescribe for a case of incipient consumption. He gave them a prescription for pills, and wrote the directions: one pill to be taken three times a day in any convenient vehicle. The family looked in the dictionary to get at the meaning of the prescription. They found "bar, wagon, carriage, wheelbarrow." After grave consideration they came to the conclusion that the doctor meant the patient should ride out and while in the vehicle he should take the pill. He followed the advice to the letter and in a few weeks the fresh air and exercise secured the advantage which other wise might not have come.

A Denver Colorado, dispatch of July 24 relates a Blue Mountain tragedy. It was at a ball. One Roach, a tough character, insisted upon dancing. He was told all the sets were full, but he was intoxicated he did not heed this. He stabbed Frank Hyde, and when a cowboy named McCord attempted to reason with him he shot him. No one else was armed and the people were horror stricken. A boy slipped to a neighboring house and got a Winchester. The lad fired at Roach and killed Mrs. Walton, "an estimable lady living in the community." Terror then reigned supreme; but Roach slipped away. All this occurred in the local school. Lord Penrhyn, the noted owner of race-horses, has just had a novel experience at the West Riding Races, which are held in the old-fashioned town of Pontefract. His leadership on arriving at the railway station found a scarcity of cabs, and consequently had to look out for some other means of going on the course, which he wished to reach as early as possible. Not being a proud man, Lord Penrhyn accepted the friendly offer of the driver of a mill-cart who was going in the direction of the racetrack, and, to the amusement of many aristocratic patrons of the turf and others, his leadership shortly after arrived at the grand stand in the mill-cart.

JINGLES OF MEMOR.

A Little Nonsense Gathered for Leisure Reading. "Why, that is a very spirited horse. I thought you told me it was on its last legs." "No, I didn't; or if I did, I meant that it was always on its hind legs." Miss Convasback: "How do you give your little doggie exercise?" Miss Redhead: "I speak kindly to him and he wags his tail." Something to Live On. At the Police Court, "Prisoner, you have no visible means of existence..." The prisoner takes out of his pocket a dirty-looking fragment of Guyana cheese. "What about this, your worship?" Editor: "Young man, your poem is excellent in many respects, but, as we have enough material to last us for the next ten years, we feel obliged to decline it." Spring Post (hopefully): "Well, sir, you will have to have something for the eleventh year." Noodles. Say there, bring me a professional burglar! I want to see if he can break into this spring chicken. Minister. Have you ever cast my first batch. Mrs. R. (proudly). Never, since my husband's death. Doctor. Your husband appears to be run down, anxious and overworked; but I see no signs of insanity. Mrs. DeFashion. I'm sure he is in danger of insanity from his family you know. Doctor. Yes, indeed. Two of his sisters had chosen to marry rich men, and then married poor ones. I wonder why Dick Fortunatus encourages his rich wife in dressing so much like a man? He wants to stand some show of finding her pocket. Ladies do not like to grow old, and yet they're the very first to adopt new wrinkles. The Tennessee militia are expected to defend the stripes if not the stars. We have no use for bear stories, said the editor. Our readers demand something spicy. Well, said the man with the manuscript, this story is about a cinnamon bear. Slang was not common in the days of Gov. William Penn, she the boys would have called Pen "his nibe." The beach continues this season are loud enough to prevent one from making out what the will waves are saying. Why, in the name of soap, don't you take a bath! I can't on principle, answered the tramp. On principle? Yes. My wife who used to follow the business before she died, told me a thousand times that walking was hard work. William the Wanderer (at the kitchen window, sniffing the delicious odor of the cooking dinner. Beantons maid, I smell— The cook. A Fatigue Literary Playground. William Black's acquaintance with America is not very extensive, as the following anecdote, told by himself only a fortnight ago, illustrates. He was asked how he managed to be so accurate in all the little details in his book, and he replied: "Well, you know that I was a reporter once, and I suppose that my newspaper training has been of value in making me accurate in scenes, dates and places. For example, only this week I was at work on my new novel, and I wanted to say something about a child's game played in one of the down-town streets in New York City. I didn't know what else to do, so I put the children to play in the game in Wall street, and when I told an American who was visiting me what I had done, he laughed at me, and said that in a long residence in New York he had never heard of children playing in Wall street. He told me it was a very busy spot, a small, narrow street, and was very much crowded. So, at his suggestion, I took the children up to some street off Sixth avenue, in the old Greenwich village, and I found also that my visitor knew a nursery rhyme that I had been trying for three months to find. I happened to say that I was looking for it, and he repeated it, much to my astonishment, yet there is no word in it that I am not sure of, but my book will not be printed until I am absolutely certain that the rhyme is correct."

A Hundred Master. A pretty girl alighted from the p. m. express at Smith's Falls last Friday and looked around in a bewildered fashion for a friend who had promised to meet her, a well-dressed young man strook up, lifted his hat and said, "Good morning miss. She was a bit dazed, and for an instant stood looking at him, thinking perhaps her friend had sent a substitute. But when the man smiled and continued, "Pleasant day, isn't it?" she suddenly comprehended. An amused, if somewhat frightened smile flitted across her mouth. Glancing at him sharply, she said in dulcet tones, "Do you know, you look as if you were old enough to know a lady when you see one. But there's no foot like an old foot." Then she walked away, leaving the would-be master rather subdued.

To Cool a Bedroom. If the sleeping room is warm, it may be cooled for a time by wringing large pieces of cotton out of water and hanging them before the open windows, says the Ladies' Home Journal. Leave the door open, and as the air comes through the wet cotton it will be cooled. This is a good device for cooling a sick-room; the clothes can then be wet again and again. Keep the eggs turning low during the process of unsetting, and sleep without a light, unless it is a tiny night lamp.
